Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuellar, the chief architect and mediator of the talks, warned the two sides in an opening statement: "If this moment is lost ... it may not readily recur,"

There were "difficulties to be overcome and pitfalls to be avoided," he said, before the two sides could agree on a framework for a solution to the Cyprus problem aimed at establishing a Federal Republic of Cyprus."

Mr. Denktash and Mr. Kyprianou shook hands and smiled before beginning to a closed-door session with the UN leader.

In a statement issued after the first session of talks, Mr. Pérez de Cuellar said he was encouraged that the two men had come together in a "relaxed and pleasant aimosphere." He said it was too early to determine how long the talks would

Weinberger Says Space Defense Needs Backup

By Bill Keller New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan's proposed space deployed, would have to be backed up by anti-aircraft radar installations and planes to protect North America against bombers, according to Defense Secretary Casper W. Weinberger.

Mr. Weinberger said Wednesday in an interview that such a continental air defense system, largely abandoned 10 years ago as obsolete in an era of quick-flying offensive missiles, should be restored to assure that protection against nuclear attack was "thoroughly reliable."

The defense secretary declined to speculate about the ultimate cost of reconstructing a system to defend against relatively slow-flying bombers and cruise missiles that might be able to slip under an anti-

However, James R. Schlesinger, a former defense secretary who was asked about Mr. Weinberger's re-marks, estimated that rebuilding and sustaining such a system of radar installations and planes would cost $50 billion a year.

The Pentagon spokesman, Michael I. Burch, said Thursday that the Defense Department did not plan any "crash program or bolt out of the blue" to build up North American air defenses immediate-ly. But he said the Pentagon would continue its gradual efforts to restore U.S. air defenses.

He disputed Mr. Schlesinger's cost estimate for an anti-bomber defense as "far too high."

Mr. Weinberger also asserted Wednesday that the level of military spending now being endorsed by Republican leaders in Congress would do "major injury" to the national security and "prevent" achievement of an arms control treaty with the Soviet Union.

He was responding to a growing consensus among congressional Republicans that Congress would pensate for inflation adjustments.

have said that they will ask Congress for a budget that adds about 6 percent after inflation.

Mr. Weinberger, who is known as a tenacious advocate of his military budget, insisted Wednesday that growth of 4 percent would mean "serious" cuts in weaponry and would convince the Soviet Union that it did not have to bargain seriously at forthcoming arms control talks.

He added that because of the long time needed to negotiate arms treaties, it was "doubtful" that any agreement would be achieved in time to lead to savings in the military budget for the fiscal year 1986, which begins in October. Asked whether, in the event of an arms treaty with the Soviet Union, he would recommend budget reductions for future years, Mr. Weinberger said: "If the present stopped short of advocating that the missile program be canceled. Senator Barry Goldwater, a Republican of Arizona and new chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has already urged President Ronald Reagan to give up on the MX. Representative Aspin's comments at the Carnegie Foundation, his first public speech since becoming committee chairman, was in re-sponse to an appeal for MX fund-ing made last week by Secretary of State George P. Shultz Mr. Shultz urged continued spending on MX and the Reagan administration's proposed $26-billion space-defense research program, to ensure progress in arms talks with the Soviet Union. Senator Simpson, explaining that the Senate leadership was intent on cutting about $20 billion from the administration's proposed Pentagon budget, asserted that reductions announced by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger were not real cutbacks because the Pentagon was still getting all the major weapons systems and other programs it wants.

Although Mr. Weinberger still wants about 10 percent real growth in military spending, a senior White House official suggested that a compromise that held growth to 3 or 4 percent but kept the MX missile program alive might be acceptable.

However, Senator Simpson armed Wednesday for sharper cuts by freezing military spending in the 1986 budget at the current level.

"Obviously to do that, there may have to be votes on elimination of various systems," he said. "We're going to have to be down to the elimination of systems and maybe even a more dramatic approach than that, and that is to say, you know, we may have to break that COULTRACT,

■ Beirut Barricades Cleared

The Lebanese Army and rival militiamen, ordered by the govern-ment to restore law and order to Beirut, began clearing the city center of earth barriers and barricades Thursday, United Press International reported earlier from Beirut.

Army officers and militia representatives supervised the cleanup by bulldozers and trucks, which began lifting the tons of debris from the Christian and Moslem sides of the Green Line, witnesses said.

The move, part of the government's agreement with Beirut's rival militiatnen, is meant to end months of anarchy and outbursts of violence in the capital.

Bonn Pledges Funds For U.S. Space Station

By William Drozdiak

BONN — The West German government has agreed to contribute $900 million over the next decade to participate in a U.S.-led program to set up a permanently manned space station.

The decision Wednesday came in response to President Ronald Reagan's appeal, made a year ago, for Europe, Japan and Canada to join the United States in funding and building the $8 billion Columbus space-station project. Italy. France and Britain are expected to announce their intentions by the end of the month.

If all goes according to plan, the manned laboratory and observation craft would be launched into space in 1992, the 500th anniversaties in space ry of Christopher Columbus' discovery of America.

Heinz Riesenhuber, West Germany's minister for research and technology, said that the planned cooperation in space between Europe and the United States carried great political and economic significance for transatlantic relations.

He said that during a review phase over the next two years, detailed contracts must be negotiated with the United States to ensure that European countries in the program earn a fair return on their controversy. Some scientists are skeptical about the need for a manned space station and contend that robots could conduct more efficiently the kind of work envisioned in the project.

The Bonn government sees its participation in the venture as an important way of gaining access to space-based technology as well as experience in developing orbiting stations that could reap commercial benefits.

Europe's previous involvement in a U.S. space project was seen as less than successful. European countries spent $750 million in 1973 to underwrite Spacelab yet failed to win much in the way of research benefits.

Another argument against European cooperation with the U.S. program is that it exhausts funds that some politicians say should be earmarked exclusively for projects

U.S. Apologizes to Poles for Program

WARSAW (AP) — The United States has formally apologized to Poland for a Radio Free Europe broadcast that implied similarities between the Polish leader, General Wojciech Jaruzelski, and Adolf Hitler, U.S. officials said Thursday.

The U.S. charge d'affaires in Warsaw, John R. Davis, delivered an apology to the Polish Foreign Ministry on Wednesday, American officials said. In Washington, the State Department said the United States government dissociated itself from the broadcast.

The Polish government spokesman, Jerzy Urban, said the Jan. 7 program raised questions about the sincerity of U.S. efforts to improve relations with Poland. ### Escaping the Deficit Bog deficit outlasts even the Karpov-Kasparov chess spectacular. But unlike that particular Moscow circus, Washington's contest may end up with everyone losing.

The job switch between Donald Regan and James Baker — these chessmen now move themselves — raises tremors as well as hope. Suppose Secretary Regan, even nearer to President Reagan than before, urges priority for his tax-reform proposals, rather than for the deficit reduction on which he has not always been so sound? Reform of the tangled tax law is less urgent than reducing the hole in the budget. If legislative action is not taken in the next few months, hopes of compressing the deficit will fade. In Congress, 1986 will usher in the biennial surrender of reason to rhetoric.

Fearing a fresh spate of suggestions that the deficit does not matter, let us recapitulate some of the reasons why it does.

America's economy depends on the level of its citizens' savings and its ability to invest them in productive — profitable — undertakings. The more these savings are sucked out of the private sector by public spending that cannot be financed by taxes, the less successful the economy will become. The public deficit now amounts to about 25 percent of private savings, a vastly higher proportion than in most times. It can only be financed by pulling savings from abroad, which is why interest rates in America have to stay high and the dollar is overvalued.

In anything but the short run, high interest rates can only depress the economy and reduce its efficiency. They discourage business from borrowing. The cheapest rate at which the best company can borrow is now around 11 percent, and company planners can no longer count on inflation wiping out this cost. In economic jargon, the real cost of borrowing is very high, even when tax breaks for some borrowers are considered.

The process debilitates the U.S. economy in another way. The contrived inflow of foreign funds and the resulting overvalu-

The struggle to reduce America's budget ation of the dollar — it has risen about 50 percent in four years - make it impossible for American producers to maintain their exports. It also ensures that some foreigners make a killing in the U.S. market.

But what is bad for America is bad, on the whole, for the world. As the U.S. boom slows down, other countries ought to take up the running. But their freedom to do so, as the Federal Reserve Board's Paul Volcker points out, is limited by the weakness of their currencies against the dollar, which makes for inflation, and by the flight of their savings to America, which keeps their interest rates high. To this must be added the debt problem of developing countries. The position of these poorer countries is exacerbated because their debts are in dollars and because U.S. protectionism limits their ability to repay them out of exports.

U.S. budget deficits would be less harmful, for a time, if savings rose. But there is no good reason why they should. The supply-siders said they would when Mr. Reagan cut taxes in 1981. They did not.

Speed is of the essence. But the process may get bogged down in argument between the executive and legislative branches, Republicans and Democrats and — within the Republican ranks — the "new right" and the pragmatists. The advance confession that Mr. Reagan's budget proposals will fall short of the mark is profoundly disappointing. His apparent reliance on Republican senators to come up with something better sounds perilously near neglect of duty, and will not boost anyone's confidence.

It is not too late to get out of this bog. But we are reduced to the cynical approach. The president should not hesitate to break his election pledges, because they were mutually inconsistent. One cannot, as he pledged, cut the budget deficit to a reasonable size without either cutting spending on defense or social security, or raising taxes. Compro-mise, probably on all these promises, has to be accepted if the worst is not to happen.

The Quiet Survivor: Bush Keeps on Jogging

By James Reston

WASHINGTON — During the W recent shuffle of the Reagan cabinet and White House staff, little attention was paid to the fact that Vice President George Bush is still presiding almost invisibly down the hall from the Oval Office. That is precisely the way he wants it. He says not a word even privately about the changes. He supports the president publicly on whatever his skipper does. He praises the old boys who are going and the new boys who are coming but remains the quiet survivor of the original Reagan White House team.

Looking to the future, that is to say to the next presidential election campaign (which has already started), the vice president is not only sitting quiet but sitting pretty.

He has established a confidential and trusting relationship with the president. The other influential White House advisers of the first term — Messrs. James Baker, Mi-chael Deaver and Edwin Meese have moved on or moved out, and Mr. Bush gets along with Donald Regan, who will be chief of staff.

More important, of all the potential presidential candidates in 1988 in either party — former Senator Howard Baker of Tennessee, Senator Robert Dole of Kansas and Representative Jack Kemp of New York on the Republican side, and Governor Mario Cuomo of New York and Senator Bill Bradley of New Jersey on the Democratic side

Mr. Bush has more experience in

In addition to his service in the House of Representatives and as chairman of the Republican National Committee, he has headed the Central Intelligence Agency, served as envoy to China and to the United Nations and, as vice president, was a member of all the National Security Council committees on foreign and defense policy.

The chances are that the control of nuclear weapons and the control of budget and trade deficits will be the presiding questions of the sec-ond Reagan term. And with the secretaries of state and defense fussing with one another on these subjects, the president may have to turn increasingly to Mr. Bush, who is well liked in Congress, for the experience he will need.

Nevertheless, the vice president has two problems. He is too moderate for the Republican conservatives, who tend to dominate Republican presidential nominating conventions, and he has been so loyal to his conservative president's policies that the Republican moderates wonder what he really believes.

He is a Connecticut Yankee from Texas, a Yale man with a Dallas Cowboys stance who has not won enthusiastic support either place. He worked tirelessly in the 1984 campaign and helped the president but did not help himself. He seemed out of character much of the time, a cheerleader rather than a candidate, whose party loyalty outran his personal convictions —a New England patrician with a mucker pose.

In the second Reagan term, however, he will be concentrating on Mr. Reagan's policies and not on the president's re-election, and in process may have a chance to demonstrate his strengths, which are considerable, rather than his vice president in recent years. But unlike former Vice President Walter Mondale, he seldom participates directly in these debates but states his opinion privately to the president when asked to do so or when he feels strongly about an issue.

In the first term, he was asked to take on several specific short-term problems that could be performed without interfering with his presiding duties in the Senate, and it may be that he will be asked to do more of this in the second term.

But like all vice presidents he has responsibilities that put severe limits on his political ambition. He is not, for example, as free as Howard Baker, Robert Dole or Jack Kemp to campaign for the 1988 nomination. He is reorganizing his staff and will probably play a more public role in the next four years than he did in the last four, but he will do so only if urged by the president.

Even with increasing influence in the White House, Mr. Bush, like former Vice President Hubert Humphrey under President Lyndon Johnson, faces formidable political problems that he is not likely to resolve unless he is permitted to play television politics -- which, as Mr. Reagan has demonstrated, is the way to the top.

tiny Andean village of Uchuraccay are a case in point. As with much about the war between the enigmatic Sendero Luminoso and the armed forces, it has been difficult to determine just how the journalists were murdered or who murdered them during their investigation of the armed conflict. It also seems unlikely that the mystery will be resolved when a court in the provincial capital of Ayacucho hands down a verdict in the coming weeks.

From the court proceedings, it seems clear, however, that the judicial verdict will flatly contradict the version of the murder that was published in May 1983 by a commission of inquiry appointed by President Fernando Belaunde Terry and headed by the renowned Peruvian novelist, Mario Vargas Llosa.

The commission concluded that the villagers had mistaken the jour-nalists for Senderistas and killed them in collective self-defense. It blamed the episode on the cultural distance between "the two Perus" the Quechua-speaking Indians of the Andes and the Spanish-speaking whites of the coastal region — and argued that everyone was guilty in some measure. Accordingly, the commission said, a general amnesty was the only just resolution of the case.

What led the Ayacucho court to question this judgment? Among the critical evidence is a series of photographs taken by one of the journalists, which suggests that they were not killed immediately, in hasty selfdefense, but survived until at least the next morning. What is more, since four of the journalists spoke Que-chua, they would have had time to identify themselves, casting doubt on the mistaken-identity theory.

Comparing Muscle in The Atlantic By John Ausland This is a second se This is the first of two articles. OSLO — While there is a wide assumption that any new armed conflict between NATO and Warsaw Pact forces would be dramatically foreshortened by the use of nuclear arms, naval planners on both sides cannot afford to be caught unprepared. A look at the direction their planning has taken is informative.

West European members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, keeping the two world wars in mind, see the Atlantic Ocean as a broad highway over which Americans come to their assistance. American naval planners, with World War II in mind. plant for a global struggle over control of the world's oceans.

Though West Europeans are reluctant to consider the possibility that

Warsaw Pact land and air forces might overrun them before seaborne American and Canadian support could arrive in meaningful amounts, this is a real prospect should war break out anytime soon.

Of course, there is no precedent for how the superpowers would actually conduct a war with the nuclear threat hanging over them. But the naval leaders of both sides have gone ahead full steam in major efforts to intimidate the other side through naval expansion. In Moscow, Admiral Sergei Gorshkov convinced Kremlin leaders decades ago that they needed a pow-erful fleet. In Washington, Navy Secretary John Lehman is steering the United States toward what is said to be a 600-ship navy.

The core of the future U.S. Navy will be 15 carrier battle groups. Each carrier will be home to about 90 aircraft of various types and will be accompanied by an assortment of surface ships and submarines. Estimating the cost of a carrier group is not easy, but the price mentioned in military literature is $18 billion.

The U.S. Navy expects these 15 carrier groups to be ready in the 1990s. But American taxpayers should not think this will end the spending. Naval planners are already looking to new carriers to replace others that are becoming obsolete.

A controversial innovation of the Reagan administration is the battleship group. Four of these are to be organized around World War II-era battleships that either have been or will be taken out of mothballs. Armed with medium-range Harpoon missiles and longer-range Tomahawk cruise missiles, they would be used to fight Soviet surface vessels and to support amphibious operations.

In any comparison with the com-bined navies of the NATO countries, Admiral Gorshkov's navy would have a long way to go. Yet he has not done badly. NATO military authorithe large number of attack and cruise missile submarines in the Soviet fleet. A large number of the so-called Backfire bombers have also been assigned to the Soviet fleet and have been exercising from airfields on the Kola Peninsula, between the Barents and White seas, in recent years. The Soviet Navy's Kiev- and Moskva-class carriers are not too worrisome, NATO analysis say, but the 60,000-ton carrier under construction in the Black Sea will be, when it is combat-ready in the 1990s. An important, but less romantic weapon in the Soviet arsenal could also play an important role. According to an official British publication. Warsaw Pact countries have about 26,000 mines for use in the eastern Atlantic, and, just as important, they have the capability to lay them. NATO, meanwhile, has inadequate mine-sweeping capabilities.

Several of NATO's supreme commanders for the Atlantic have complained that there is no point in their ferrying reinforcements and supplies across the Atlantic if they cannot use European ports because of the dan-

When weighing NATO against Warsaw Pact navies, however, one must also compare the ability to conduct a protracted conflict. According to a Pentagon report to Congress, the U.S. Navy has only about a quarter of the ammunition it would need to be able to fight until American wartime production got under way. Efforts are being made to correct this, but the navy will not reach the level of two-thirds of its required ammunition until the end of this decade. The Soviet Navy, for its part, lacks bases in the Atlantic. Soviet vessels would, therefore, be dependent on vulnerable maintenance ships for onthe-spot repairs. If Warsaw Pact forces did not manage to deny NATO the use of the airfields in northern Norway, any ship returning to repair facilities on the Kola Peninsula would be vulnerable to air attack. Nor would repair facilities in the Baltic be available to ships in the Atlantic before the Warsaw Pact gained control of the Danish Straits and southern Norway.

Our redeployment will be an impor-tant step toward this goal, but it will be extremely difficult to achieve without the cooperation of both Leb-anon and Syria. Will they partici-pate? We shall soon know.

We have been forced to take this unilateral step by the failure of the withdrawal talks at Naqoura, in Lebanon, and by Syria's increasing in-transigence on the subject.

Syria has assumed practical custo-dianship over the Lebanese government and was responsible for the abrogation of the Israeli-Lebanese withdrawal agreement of last May 17, Since then, it has been evident that any accord between Lebanon and Israel would inevitably have to be approved in Damascus.

prevented on both sides of the border. This, indeed, was Syria's declared intention. We Israelis also took hope from our past experience with Syria. Following the 1973 war, for example, we were able to conclude security arrangements that continue to serve both countries well, safeguarding tranquillity in vulnerable areas in ebanon and along the Syrian-Israeli border. To us, this demonstrated that we could reach tacit understandings with Damascus to resolve potentially dangerous friction — and today, as in the past, we were prepared to look for unorthodox solutions. Yet as time elapsed, it became clear at Nagoura that there was little prospect of reaching an agreement. The absence of flexibility on Syria's part blocked Lebanese attempts to reach an understanding, producing a virtual deadlock and prompting thoughts of unilateral action. The Syrians, it seemed, were not impressed by the prospects of havoc and bloodshed that might follow a unilat-

It is not, however, too late to reach an agreement. Brian E. Urquhart, the United Nations undersecretary, has held talks in Jerusalem, Beirut and Darnascus. That, together with the Israeli cabinet decision, may have a catalytic effect in helping all sides to reach a last-minute arrangement. Israel's concern to reach such an agreement is sharpened by its memo-ry of the tragic fighting that occurred in the Chuf mountains in Lebanon following our withdrawal from that region in the summer of 1983. Now, more than a year later, we deeply hope that the Lebanese government will not repeat its fatal error then its refusal to negotiate an agreement to guarantee the security of the area after an Israeli withdrawal. If such a scenario is repeated in southern Lebanon, neither Syria nor Lebanon can be absolved of responsibility. Israel, for its part, will not relent in its efforts to build bridges to all the communities in Lebanon. We have aiready established a friendly relationship with the Christians and more recently, have initiated a dialogue with the Druze. We are also reaching out to the Shiite community across our northern frontier, and we hope eventually to develop good neighborly relations with them.

Yet all of this will depend to a large extent on Syria. The choice Damascus faces is clear. It can use force to establish a protectorate in Lebanon and prevent an arrangement between Jerusalem and Beirut, or it can facilitate such an arrangement as part of a farsighted, statesmanlike policy. Damascus would hardly serve its own interest by adopting a strategy of force that ignored both Lebanon's need for stability and independence and Israel's right to protect its northern border area. In the long run, such a strategy would only unsettle the region and deepen Syria's isolation. If, on the other hand, the Syrians opt for the constructive pragmatism of an informal arrangement, they would help resolve the problems along the Israeli-Lebanese frontier and also help Lebanon to enter an era of reconciliation, reconstruction and tangled politics of this region.

LETTER An Asian Yalta?

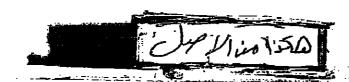

Regarding the opinion column "1985: Time to Denounce Yalta Fraud" (Jan. 5) by George F. Will:

Since the crimes of Stalin were exposed long before February 1945, the Yalta agreement was an act of mere folly. It gave the green light to the seizure of Eastern and Central Europe. It shattered the whole framework of historical Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals. What we are seeing now could prepare the way to a second Yalta in East Asia. The new "useful interlocutor" is the head of Communist China peace. Surely, this would be in Syria's with its 1 billion people. To believe interest; it would help Damascus play the central role it seeks in the lasting change in China is a travesty.

CHANDIGARH, India - Security forces in India's northern state of Punjab and in the adjacent state of Haryana were put on alert Thursday, a day after three men shot and wounded the leading priest of the highest Sikh religious order, officials said. Iathedar Giani Kirpal Singh, head priest of the Akal Takht in Amnissa's Golden Temple, was said by doctors to be out of danger Wednesday night following the shooting outside village near the Punjab town of Ludhiana. Police arrested two men Thursday who are suspects in the shooting, the Press Trust of India new agency reported. The agency said security forces were looking for a

Mr. Singh is widely viewed as a moderate among Sikh leaders. The Press Trust of India news agency said he had spoken out against sectarian violence and opposed the smuggling of arms by extremists into the Golden Temple before the army moved into the Sikh shrine seven months ago in a battle that killed at least 800 people.

Officials in Chandigarh said Mr. Singh had attended a religious cere-mony shortly before he was at-thigh and head with six bullets. Police earlier held five persons for questioning in connection with the attack. Sources here said that two of them were Sikhs aged 23 and

The press agency said the shooting was "the first major act of terrorism" in Punjab since troops stormed the Golden Temple in June to quell extremists fighting for an independent Sikh nation.

Extremists led by a hard-line Sikh preacher, Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, fortified the Akal Takht as their last stronghold, knocking out an armored vehicle before Mr. Bhindranwale was killed in the fighting.

The other state in which security forces were put on alert Thursday, Haryana, was formerly the southern part of Punjab.

KINGSTON, Jamaica - Protesters blocking roads with debris and burning tires brought Kingston to a standstill for a second day and caused disruptions in many other parts of Jamaica. The protests, Tuesday and Wednesday, were the most serious in the more than four years since Prime Minister Edward P. G. Seaga took office. [Early Thursday, security forces using armored personnel carriers and heavy road equipment continued to patrol the streets of Kingston, The Associated Press reported].

[Most major streets in the capital had been swept clean of roadblocks, and the government news agency, Jampress, said that most roads in the north coast resort areas also were clear.]

Police said Wednesday that four demonstrators had been killed since the protests started Tuesday and that 11 had been injured. Earlier, three deaths had been reported. Some Jamaican journalists put the number of injured as high as 23. A government official said about a dozen protesters had been

Drug Abuse Increases Worldwide UN Report Calls Heroin Use a Major Problem in Europe

VIENNA — Worldwide drug abuse and related crimes reached unprecedented proportions last year, even posing a threat to the security of some countries, according to a United Nations report released Wednesday.

"Illicit production, trafficking and abuse has become even more serious" in 1984, the annual report of the International Narcotics Con-trol Board said. "An unprecedented number of countries and human beings are affected."

The report said that the problem has become so pervasive that "even the very security of some states are

Cocaine "has become a major drug of abuse" with the largest recent amounts seized in West Germany, Belgium, France and Spain, the report said. In Western Europe, amphetamine misuse is greatest in Scandinavia, it said.

In the United States, heroin abuse last year remained "relative-ly stable" while cocaine usage "continues to escalate," the report said. Most widely misused is mariinana, "and the number of persons who use this drug once or more monthly is estimated at more than 20 million.

Taiwan Leader Presses Murder Inquiry in U.S.

The Associated Press TAIPÉI - President Chiang

Ching-kuo, who reportedly is furious over the alleged involvement of Taiwanese military intelligence officers in the slaying of a Chinese-American journalist, has declared that he wants the killers punished 'no matter what their rank."

Officials of the Foreign and De-fense ministries met Thursday to discuss the incident, which has linked a top official of the Defense Ministry's Intelligence Bureau to the assassination of a political writ-er, Henry Liu, 52. Mr. Liu was shot in the garage of his home in Daly City. California. on Oct. 15, allegedly by two Asians.

Taiwan government sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Mr. Chiang ordered a special committee investigating the slaying to "spare no effort to find out the truth and punish those responsible, no matter what their rank." The makeup of the committee is not known.

"The big boss was very mad," said a government official after a meeting of the ruling Kuomintang's standing committee.

Authorities have arrested the Intelligence Bureau's deputy chief. Colonel Chen Hu-men, in connec-tion with the killing, and "several others" are being questioned. The chief of the bureau, Vice Admiral Wang Shi-lin, has been dismissed. He is a former consul at the Nationalist Chinese Embassy in been implicated by two gangsters from Taiwan wanted by California authorities in the assassination. The two were arrested in Taiwan in an anti-crime sweep in November.

San Mateo County prosecutors have issued a warrant charging Chen Chi-li with Mr. Liu's murder. He is the reputed leader of the Taiwanese underworld group known as the Bamboo Gang, which has branches in the United States.

Among those attending Thursday's meeting was John Chang, di-rector of the Foreign Ministry's North American Affairs Office. There was concern here that any involvement of Taiwanese officials in the incident might damage existing U.S. relations with Taiwan. The United States and Taiwan Taiwan newspapers reported that two other ranking officials of the Intelligence Bureau, who were not identified, had already been arrested. Like Colonel Chen, the newspapers said, they were not directly involved in planning the assassination but knew of the plot.

Government officials declined to comment on the reports.

Mr. Liu, who worked in Taiwan before emigrating to the United States in the 1970s, had written several articles critical of the Nationalist Chinese government and was reported to have finished revising a biography of the Taiwan president shortly before his death.

Dow Off 1.99 in N.Y. Trading

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Airline issues were off sharply in an otherwise mixed and drifting stock-market session Thursday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down about 7 points at its midday low, closed with a loss of 1.99 at 1,228.69.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange any the Federal Reserve said Thursday.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to 113.55 million shares, against 135.52 million Wednesday.

The weakness in the airline issues sent the Dow Jones average of 20 transportation stocks down 10.52 points to 584.70.

Before the market opened, the government reported that housing starts rose 2.1 percent in December to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of nearly 1.6 million.

NEW YORK — The nation's basic money supply expanded by $2.1 billion in early January, the Federal Reserve said Thursday.

The basic supply, called M-1, rose to a seasonally adjusted $559.4 billion in the week ended Jan. 7 from a revised $557.3 billion the previous week, the central bank said. The previous week's figure originally was estimated as $557.2 billion.

M-1 represents funds readily available for circulation. spending, and includes cash in circulation, checking deposits and nonbank travelers

Lower interest rates "are beginning to revive homebuilding activity," said Malcolm Baldrige, the secretary of Commerce.

A few minutes after trading got under way, International Business Machines reported fourth-quarter earnings of $3.55 a share, up from $3.06 in the last three months of 1983.

The company's earnings, which are closely watched on Wall Street because of the preeminent position of IRM stock in the market came nent position of IBM stock in the market, came in above most advance estimates on Wall Street, which generally were in the $3.40-$3.50 range. Still, IBM stock slipped ¼ to 123% after ning at 124%. Rockwell International dropped 1% to 30%. The company said it agreed to buy Allen-Bradley, a privately held, major manufacturer of factory automation equipment.

HOW CONTRARIANS REALIZED 800% PROFITS

in 1982, while the DOW was drooping under 800, when the majority of seers were bearish, we rebuked the consensus, predicting "THE DJI WILL TOUCH 1,000 BEPORE HITTING 750". It is also riveting to recall that at, or near, the nadir of despair, a prestigious publication featured a story headlined: "The Death of Equities". Their orthodoxy boomeranged; the Bull rampaged to 1290, our optimism was vindicated. After the market soared, the same magazine released an article entitled: "The Re-Birth of Equities". Once again, they were myopic; the market sagged. A month ago, Business Week published alengthy discourse with the scalding title: "The Death of Mining", an obituary for the North American mining industry.

Our cerebral juices stir, we challenge their prosaic thinking. "Power-Eitilsts" are preconditioned to buy into weakness, to sell into strength, as we recognized when our researchers recommended BOEING at $16, FORD around $17, G.M. at $39, SEARS under $19 (before splits), and other seasoned shares that the "Street" once scorned, misguided by herd instinct. What gurus tail to divine is that "misery" has already been factored into the price of AMAX, ASARCO, INCO, NEWMONT, NORANDA and PHELPS DODGE, that to sell after the "Group" has been decimated is to dety logic. When Elitists are ready to peddle their inventories, the Group will undergo a metamorphosis; fiscal events are rarely spontaneous combustion, movements are orchestrated.

Our forthcoming letter discusses why the DJI will gallop over 1500, why mining shares will recover; in addition, CGR focuses upon a low-priced equity with the dynamics to vault to prominence, emulating the success of a recently recommended "special situation" that escalated 800% in a brief time-span. # Laurie Lee and a Child's View of a Vanished World

ONDON — The Queen's Elm pub is one of Laurie Lee's two locals and is so named because Queen Eliza-beth I took shelter there under a tree in a storm. Henceforth, she decreed, this should be called the Queen's Elm.

"I don't believe a word of it," says Laurie Lee. He is no fool, and mistrusts tales that include the word henceforth. Laurie Lee's other pub is in a small Cotswold valley in the village of Slad, where he was raised and still spends weekends. Slad is the center of "Cider With Rosie," his memoir of childhood which has sold three million copies since it was published in 1959, has never been out of print and has gone into 20 Penguin paperback editions. Slad is still the center of his heart:

"I love coming away on Sunday nights, but the coming away is only a prelude to

His weekday London life is reclusive and based on unchanging routine. "In London 1 can write undisturbed. One is much more exposed in the country. I'm gregarious with a pronounced defensive attachment. I thought I could write away in the most romantic way, in a tweed suit looking out at the buttercups and pastures. But people would come in. The country people do côme without warning; they come to tea and stay until midnight. I like to be able to say without hurting anyone. Well, I've got to be going now.' You can't do that when people are in your cave."
His Chelsea flat is his prison cell; many writers, he observes, write best from prison. He finds London gross, top-heavy, out of focus and out of scale. London leaves him with a bitter taste. "I have just been biting the hand that feeds me, " he once wrote of London, "and it tastes of soot."

ATER, over dinner at the Chelsea Arts Club, a noisy, companionable place with members who look like minor figures in literary memoirs and a fine snooker table where Laurie Lee used to play with Sir Alexander Fleming, he says rather sud-

There is a trend, if I may suggest it, that at my center is the village which I've never really left. The point I wish to make is I've been everywhere, all around the world. I've lived in London for 25 years. But I never dream of London. I slip back into those vivid dreams of cottages, slightly rearranged, my mother always there. I've been on these long elastic pulleys, but it is always to that village I go back. Most people change wives, houses, countries. I have a kind of fixture from which I can't escape and from which I sup-pose I don't want to escape. I come away in order to return. On its 25th anniversary, "Cider With Rosie" is an established minor classic, minor not in quality but because Lee chose deliberately to keep it on a small scale: a child's view of a vanished world that was green and loving and harsh. No other book of his has been as successful because, he says, you have only one childhood.

"I was lucky to have such a concentrated childhood, not to be dragged from one place to another. It's not like being trapped, but we lived in a capsule from which there was no escape. Not that we wished for one. And not only were there no distractions, there was continuity. As a child I could see on that one

small green stage the beginnings and ends of

Like many boys his age, he was named Laurence, after the church in nearby Stroud and, like them, was always called Laurie, though his sisters called him Loll. He still gets the occasional letter to Miss Laurie Lee. to which he politely replies Dear Mr. Bill or Dear Mr. Fred.

Born in 1914, he likes at moments to play the old codger. "Most of my life has been spent living and celebrating being alive. Now it is spent tidying up and enduring and trying not to be knocked down by cars," he

In his own words, he is often shy and extremely devious. He has spurts of self-advertisement, rearranging displays in bookstores to show his own works to advantage and, he says, when tipsy, signing not only his own books but those by D.H. Lawrence, Dostoyevsky or whatever is at hand.

HE devious side is the natural heritage of one who has grown up in a tiny village, where, he has said, life was as open as a cucumber frame, and who must resort to stealth to keep his privacy.

"He's a tricky customer," says one of his publishers. He only allows one photograph to be released, a gray anonymous image. In fact he more resembles a sepia print from childhood, with its wide, observing eyes and the secret contented smile of a man who all his life has been cossetted and adored by

"I was cushioned by lovely women. They were my guardians, they gave me confihe says. He grew up with three beautiful, billowy older sisters who tickled and teased and admired him, an affectionate and often distracted mother, and two brothers. His father left his wife and children (the daughters were from his first marriage) when Laurie was three.

"I remember saying I'm glad there's not a man in the house, " he says. "I wouldn't have been as free or as loved.

"Cider With Rosie" has been translated into many languages and was a Book of the Month selection in the United States where it was unfortunately called "Edge of Day: Boyhood in the West of England." The Americans, Lee was told, do not drink cider. (Nor does he, preferring whisky and beer.) It is taught in American and British schools, a sure way, Lee says, to make young people detest it. Recently, to celebrate its 25th year, Century in London and Crown in New York published a fancy illustrated edition, which might tempt the unknowing into thinking it just another exercise in nostalgia.

Not only does "Cider With Rosie" precede the present nostalgia boom, but it is funny, never sentimental, sunlit and sometimes cruel, a book with no model or successor. Before he wrote it, Lee was a poet who never quite measured up to his early success - Cyril Connolly published him in "Horizon" and his first collection of poems was published by Leonard Woolf at the Hogarth Press in 1944. The precision and compression of poetry are found more often in "Rosie" than in his verse.

"It's the reduction," he says. "The writing that I really tried to do is poetry, which is reduction, simplification, rather than a rhetorical expression of experience. Cider With Rosie' is not so far off from the poems - an essay in condensing, so everything can say what it can and some words can say more

The book begins with Laurie, aged three, being set down in the summer grass, which is taller than he.

"I began my tale where this light sparkled brightest, close up, at the age of three, when I was no taller than the grass and was an intimate of insects and knew the details of stones and chair legs, " he wrote later.

"It was not meant to be nostalgic," he says. "I was committed to my family, my neighbors and our childhood -a magic and tormenting time. I wanted to celebrate and also record the time I saw, to praise the life I'd had to preserve it, and to live again both the good and the bad.

There were dark sides to it. Children dying in a couple of days of simple diseases. There was also the drudgery that wore the women out young.

Lee's mother, born Nance Light, was a handsome country girl, "disordered, hysterical, loving," he wrote. "She was muddled and mischievous as a chimney jackdaw, she made her nest of rags and jewels, was happy in the sunlight, squawked loudly at danger, pried and was insatiably curious, forgot when to eat or ate all day, and sang when the sunsets were red." Lee watched the tasks of daily life wear her down.

'Ît was a deep stab for me to notice such a thing happening so quickly," he says. After his mother had waited 35 years for her husband to return, news came of his death and she, too, gave up. "She never mentioned him again, but spoke to shades, saw visions, and then she died." Lee wrote.

"I found a wonderful thing last weekend," he added at dinner. "A hand-embroidered card which my father made once when he was in hospital. And on the back was written, 'To Nance from Reg. With his love.' But it's in her handwriting. Twe kept that."

VENTUALLY, the time came for Laurie to set off from his village. And in 1934, at 19 and still soft at the edges, he left, carrying his fiddle. As "Cider With Rosie" begins with Laurie in the grass, his second memoir, "As I Walked Out One Midsummer Morning," opens with "the stooping figure of my mother waist deep in the grass and caught there like a piece of sheep's wool."

He walks to London in a month and then, because his only foreign phrase is, "Will you give me a glass of water?" in Spanish, he walks across Spain, playing his violin. "The better class of Spaniard would send a servant and ask me to play Schubert's 'Serenade.' Then they'd shower me with biscuits," he

"Another night," he writes, "a young smuggler invited me to serenade his invalid mistress, after which I was awarded with a wristwatch which ticked madly for an hour and then exploded in a shower of wheels."

It is a young man's book, wide-eyed and innocent, recording the end of a world in which wide-eyed innocence was possible. At its end Laurie, having been repatriated by the British government, sets off on foot across the Pyrenees to the cold winter of the Spanish Civil War. Lee's publishers have waited for years for his third volume of memoirs, which he sometimes states is in the battered plastic briefcase he always carries. "Anyway," he says rather airily in a phrase that will give his publishers no comfort, "all the books I've written were autobiographical," During World War II, he worked at the Ministry of Information, shared a flat with Cecil Day Lewis and says he was served lunch every day by John Betjeman's adored heroine, "Joan Hunter Dunn" ("very stern, good-looking, a Home Counties girl"). At night while firewatching he played chamber music with a blind cellist and a deaf viola player. "This doesn't happen now. Everyone has hi-fi. They listen, they don't play."

If he were capable of playing anything at all on his violin, he would choose Paganini's "Devil's Trill" because "it's real flash and I like to show off," and Bach's unaccompanied sonatas. He listens mostly to chamber

Lee's last salaried job was in 1951, when he wrote captions for the Festival of Britain. He helped devise an eccentrics' corner that included a statue of Lewis Carroll's White Knight with a velvet-gloved hand that kept patting him on the back while a voice proclaimed, "You're wonderful, you're simply wonderful."

"The king couldn't quite make it out. He expected statues to be a bit more formal, I think," Lee says. Still, his festival work won him an MBE (Member of the Order of the British Empire) in 1952.

'Cider With Rosie," which has supported Lee since it came out, was written three times over two years on the back of discarded BBC scripts. Lee and his wife, Cathy, lived in deep poverty the whole time and Lee was strangely happy.

"I'd find myself with a special expression sometimes on my face, pleasure or grief, sometimes chuckling out loud because the memory was so intense." The book was an immediate

Lee sees them when he goes home weekends. In 1983, without warning them, he published "Two Women," a collection of his photographs of Cathy and Jessy, and a declaration of his love for them.

He thinks it may have been a mistake, "I've realized you should never show family snapshots." He adds, "In this book, although I've tried to keep it light, I think I've declared myself. I think that's a mistake." He quotes Blake's lines about losing one's love by telling it.

"All love lives by slowly moving towards its end," he writes, "and is sharpened by the snake-bite of farewell in it." At 70, he sees his much younger wife and daughter moving

A Wine Maker Grows in Brooklyn, Or Improving the Kosher Product

by Frank J. Prial

EW YORK — Don't look back, Robert Mondavi, Joe Zakon may be gaining on you. Joe Zakon? Yes, Joe Zakon, Crown Heights's pre-eminent commercial wine maker. He is also Crown Heights's only commercial wine maker, but pre-eminent sounds better.

Crown Heights is a working-class Brooklyn neighborhood not known for its vineyards. But it is populated heavily by Orthodox Jews who, while they are not known as connoisseurs of the grape, are drinkers of Wine and Jewish tradition are inextricable. Jews have always consumed wine as part of their religious rites, both at home and in the temple. Since Orthodox Jews observe their religious rituals more often than others, it stands to reason that they consume more of what has come to be known as sacramental or kosher wine.

Zakon hopes one day to supply a lot of it. "Do you realize," he says with a note of awe in his voice, "that my synagogue alone goes through five cases of wine on a Saturday for kiddush, just with people coming in and out? And that the same thing is going on all over Brooklyn?" Kiddush is a prayer said over wine on ceremonial occasions.

Zakon worships at the United Luba-vitcher Yeshivoth on Eastern Parkway, a few blocks from his home on Montgomery Street. Growing up in an Orthodox Jewish family, he was exposed to wine at an early We had wine at our own family kiddush every Saturday," he said. "You can't believe how awful that stuff is. Every week I

"I decided when I was just a kid" — he is 27 now — "that there had to be something better than that sweet concord wine. I could't find it. So I went to the public library in Manhattan and read everything they had later I saw it as a message — I decided to on wine. I was going to make my own. I did.

and it was a total disaster." But not for long.
That was in 1977. At 19, he was discouraged but not defeated. In 1978 he bought California grapes — zinfandel, ruby cabernet and barbera -- enough for 150 gallons of wine. "It was better," he said. "I was begin-

In those days, Zakon made his wine in the basement of the house on Montgomery Street where he still lives with his parents. He keeps a small makeshift laboratory at home, as well as a tiny, cluttered office. His winery is considerably expanded and known as Crown Regal Cellars.

HE turning point came in 1979. He drove up to the Finger Lakes and came back with seyval blanc and concord grapes. "The concord is my bread and butter, my cash flow," he said, "but my concord is good stuff, not junk." The seyval blane is a white hybrid. "One expert told me he thought I'd given him a California chardonnay," Zakon said proudly.

That year, he said. "I went to work for the make wine full time." After a mildly disastrous vintage in 1980 — he said his supplier sent him a load of not-so-fresh Marechal Foch, a red hybrid grape —Zakon hit his stride in 1981. He made 700 cases; De Chaunac, another red hybrid grape from the Finger Lakes; concord, and something he called Mellow Red, a blend of cabernet sauvignon from Long Island and a dash of concord. "The concord was gone in no time — 400 cases of it." he said. In 1982, he made some 700 cases of concord and in 1983, almost 1,000. "It's incredible," he said, "there is actually a black market here in Crown Heights for my concord wine. At $3 or $3.50 it sells right out. But some guys who still have it sell it for twice that."

With sweet concord kosher wine paying the bills, Zakon has been able to branch out. His biggest hit last year was his chardonnay, made from New York grapes. "It's on the wine list at the River Cafe," he said, "and I may get the Water Club and, who knows, NOWN Regal Cellars is a grandiose name for the drab warehouse where I the wine is made, and perhaps for the wines themselves, which have a considerable way to go before they offer significant competition for the great wines of Europe and California. But Zakon's ideas are in keeping with the name. He is negotiating to acquire space under the Manhattan supports for the Brooklyn Bridge. "It would be more than a winery." he said. "It would be a showcase for New York state wines. It would be a major tourist attraction. It could also be a retail

This year, there will be no chardonnay. Zakon was unable to buy any in New York at a reasonable price. He will make some Johannisberg riesling from New York grapes. "Someday I will have my own vine-yard out there," he said, "and I'll have my own source of supply."

The dry concord is Zakon's vision of the future, or at least the future for fans of kosher concord wine. He hopes that congregations all over the borough will turn their backs on the sticky, sweet, grapy wine of their forebears and take into their midst Crown Regal dry concord, a practically sugarless variation of his regular concord. The grapy taste is there, but the wine is dry and better balanced. "It'll take some getting used too," he acknowledges. "but well you never know - it may sell"

Zakon is planning a label that shows the Brooklyn Bridge, and he would like to do a label honoring his Lubavitcher congregation, at 770 Eastern Parkway. "I don't know which wine it will be," he said, "maybe the dry concord. I will call it just '770.'

He also is thinking of jettisoning the name Crown Regal Cellars. "I named it after the neighborhood," he said, "but people say it sounds too much like a whisky. If he gets rid of Crown Regal, he may have

Booksellers: An Independent Lot

by Deborah Hofmann

EW YORK - Dan Balaban, a New Jersey writer, dreamed of a Byronesque life. He opened Balaban's Books in Teaneck, New Jersey, "to be around my dear books." Lewis Meyer, "a failure as a lawyer," now owns a bookstore in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Pat Shadof, owner of the Sierra Bookshop in South Lake Tahoe, California, was divorced, "so I looked for a respectable business." A "bored housewife," Martha McLeod, was "tired of scrubbing floors and washing clothes," so she opened the Carolina Bookrack in Greenville, South Carolina.

Three-fourths of all bookstores around the United States are independent, and these people are typical of those who own and manage them. Two-fifths of them earned less than $100,000 in retail sales of books in 1983, but the independent operators accounted for nearly half the market share of all retail book sales in 1983.

These are among the findings of a survey by The New York Times in 1984 of 2,306 general-interest booksellers across the country representing 5,477 sales locations.

Publishers say the 50-50 balance between the independent bookstores and the three national bookselling chains, Waldenbooks, B. Dalton Booksellers and Crown Books, is a key to the continued health of the publishing industry.

"These booksellers cherish individual books as they do their customers," said Jean Rawitt, publicity director of the E.P. Dutton Publishing Co. "They keep books alive. We rely on the chains more for blockbuster books, but we depend on independents to go after sales for older titles, steady sellers and the unusual book, and just couldn't go without their sales."

Booksellers tend to be highly educated, proud and fiercely independent. Two out of three are in small towns, and they feel they attend to their customers much as a rector attends to a small-town parish.

Many were poets, teachers or librarians. Some were once milk deliverers, lawyers, philosophers, psychologists or retailers. They tend to be 30 to 44 years old, and twothirds have been in the business less than 10

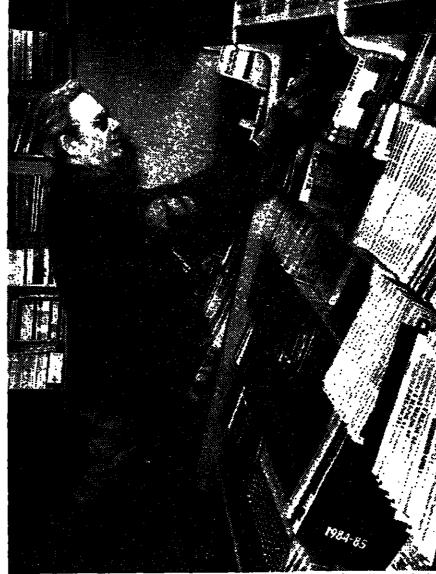

NOTHER quarter of those sampled said they had been in the business 11 1 to 20 years, having taken advantage of low interest rates and easy bank financing when they bought their stores. Sixty percent said they had a college degree or an advanced degree in a professional field and 24 percent said they had "some college educa-

With a Ph.D. in English, David Carter, owner of the Spencer Bookshop in Spencer. Indiana, "felt a destiny to bring literacy to the masses." Thirty-eight percent said they considered gave that remote island community of 1,300 their stores among the two or three major bookstores in their area, and 28 percent said they were the major retailers. Abby Curlew, who owns Curlew Books on Unalaska Island in the Aleutians, 900 miles (1.460 kilometers) from Anchorage, said she people "an alternative to bars, cannery drudgery and lousy weather - I consider myself a mental health consultant."

Nearly one in four dealers said the main reason for entering the business was the need for a bookstore in the community, often meshed with a desire "to be my own boss." Ira Campbell, owner of Campbell's Bookshop in Terre Haute, Indiana, wanted a copy of "Moby Dick" but could not find one.

There was no bookstore in the area in 1945, so I opened one," he said. But one-third of the respondents said they were in the business for sheer love of books.

A like-minded 10 percent said they had got into the business to be involved with other people or fulfill a dream. Fred Austin, co-owner of Marketplace Books in Eugene. Oregon, said, "It sounded like a kindly life, of helping people satisfy their needs for books.

Rupert LeCraw, owner of Oxford Bookstore in Atlanta, said, "I've always admired people who tried to improve themselves and opened my bookstore to serve those people." Alta Johnson, one of five women who own the Lake Country Bookseller in White Bear. Minnesota, said: "It was a romantic idea.

and I always wanted a bookstore. It was a community effort."

Among independent book dealers, women tend to take on the management of the business as well as all the bookkeeping, advertising, carpentry and janitorial tasks.

About 6 out of 10 of the stores earning less than $100,000 in retail sales in 1983 were owned by women. The percentages owned by men and women are evenly split until the $500,000 income level, where 6 in 10 stores are owned by men.

Patricia Raneri of Lake Park, Florida, who opened the Second Chapter Bookstore 10 years ago, said: "Most women after a divorce drown their sorrows reading books. I bought the whole darn store."

Keeping in the black, owners of stores of ali sizes say, takes more than books.

Forty-two percent carry computer manuals and 14 percent carry computer software packages. Eighty-four percent carry other sideline offerings, and more than a third say that these items are "essential to our overall business." An additional one-quarter say sidelines are "somewhat important"

OPENHAGEN - The Royal Copenhagen Porcelain Manufactory in Copenhagen believes in doing things the old-fashioned way - by hand. Blue Fluted, a pattern introduced in the company's first year of operation in 1775, remains one of its most popular designs and is still made with each delicate loral motif painted by individual artists.

Such devotion to tradition and craftsmanship has not gone unnoticed. Royal Copenhagen Porcelain dinner services, figurines and decorative pieces are owned by the royal houses of Europe, by heads of state, by the nobility, by the rich, and by ordinary citizens with an appreciation for good design.
Royal Copenhagen emerged as a name to be reckoned with for ceramic achievement in 1889 when it won the Grand Prix at the Universal Exposition in Paris for the naturalistic underglaze painting style developed by Arnold Krog. This underglaze technique uses a limited palette — only blue, chrome green and red gold - but the special glaze and very intense firing give the colors the soft, misty, cool tone that distinguishes the porcelain from the work of other factories. Indeed, connoisseurs can recognize it without looking underneath for the company trademark of three wavy blue lines representing the three principal Danish water-

Although the company exports to about 80 countries, its shop at 6 Amagertory on Stroget (the midtown pedestrian street in Copenhagen) offers the widest selection anywhere, with many items not available abroad. This is the only place, for example, where a collector can purchase seconds at a saving of 25 percent and small sacrifice to aesthetics. Sometimes you have to look hard to find the flaw.

Elsewhere in the store the flawless porcelain is displayed more elegantly. The setting is entirely appropriate, consisting of adjoining houses in the Renaissance style, one built in 1616 for an alderman of the city, its twin added in 1898. The celebrated Blue Fluted, along with Blue Flower, which dates to 1780, as well as more modern services like Domino, in plain white with brown rim and design of three dots, and the newest, Noblesse, ornamented with a blue flowering vine, are displayed at set tables, just as they would appear in a private home before a dinner

HE tables are changed every 10 days and there are always fresh flowers. (A sampling of prices for the Blue Fluted service, half-lace version: the covered bouillon cup with saucer is around $64; dinner plate of just under 10 inches, $23; covered egetable dish, $76.)

Flora Danica, possibly the most exclusive dinner service in the world, has a room all to itself. The first set of this gold-encrusted porcelain ornamented with botanical illustrations representing some 700 Danish wild plants was ordered in 1789 by Crown Prince Frederick as a gift for Empress Catherine of Russia, who died before it was completed.

The service is today at Copenhagen's Rosen-Edward VII. is now at Windsor Castle.

Visitors to the Royal Copenhagen Porcelain factory at 45 Smallegade on the out-skirts of town see services such as this under production. The gold, before firing, looks a drab brown. Each floral motif is painstakingly copied from 18th-century copperprints, each raised flower modeled by hand, the serrated edges and ornamental holes cut out by hand.

A dinner plate sells for around $193, a perforated dinner plate for around $275. Yet t is not unusual for a customer to spend $15,000 on Flora Danica. Recently, says Jorn Due, manager of the shop, the store received a $90,000 order for a service for 26.

Casting figurines is a time-consuming process also, since each consists of many pieces cast separately and then put together. Take the charming children in Danish national costumes, holding bouquets or garlands of flowers, each petal of which is made separately. This series, in many bright colors, is decorated by hand over the glaze. The most popular figures are the Greenland boy with his blue anorak (the equivalent of $298) and the Greenland girl in her orange anorak

Denmark's Regal Porcelain The most expensive piece in production, at around $22,727, is based on the Hans Christian Andersen fairy tale "The Princess and the Pea." Mark Dalgas, project director at the factory, says that it takes nine months to paint the princess. She reposes on a pile of cushions, her powdered hair piled high, and was designed in 1911 by Gerhard Henning as a cookie jar, a mundane use hardly suited to her rank.

> Tradition notwithstanding, Royal Copenhagen has all along shown a determination to keep up with the times and not become a museum factory. Thus faience and stoneware have been added to the line and there are commissions to contemporary artists like Lin Utzon, daughter of Jorn Utzon, the Danish architect responsible for the Sydney Opera House in Australia. Her porcelain bowls and vases in the Platina series are decorated with a deep cobalt-blue in-glaze decoration, contrasting with an application of matt platinum over the glaze.

Sterett-Gittings Kelsey is the only American on the company's roster. Her jolly little figures, such as a boy on a sled ($98), a girl clutching a snowball, a snowman and a boy on a rocking horse are in the company's typical underglaze with blue predominating. The shop's prices are generally about half

An Island Off Yucatán

by Richard Halloran

EW YORK - It takes a sense of adventure to spend a holiday on the island of Cozumel, off the coast of the Yucatán Peninsula in

The island is covered with tangled brown jungle and surrounded by green water, rough and surf — white on the eastern, Caribbean shore, clear and tranquil on the western shore facing the Yucatan. Along that western edge, a thin slice of habitation has been carved out of the thick growth, with the whitewashed town of San Miguel in the center and strips of beaches stretching to the north and south. The weather is sunny most of the year and hot by May. In midsummer, the temperature climbs to at least 100 degrees Fahrenheit (37 degrees centigrade), but ummer is a lively season, with a particular Mexican flavor, because that is when Mexicans from the mainland come for their holi-

With Cozumel's relaxed ambience, visitors can simply laze on the beach, soaking up sun and imagining the shapes of the occa-sional billowing clouds. As a collector of beaches, I'd rate those on Cozumel as good. You can swim out from 300 yards to half a mile in clear water, but the beaches are a little rocky and not up to the best in the Pacific. Visitors can also snorkel and scuba dive in some of the great lagoons and reefs of the Western Hemisphere as well as explore splendid Mayan ruins, with a dash of night life in open-air restaurants and some shopping thrown in. Cozumel is a nature lover's delight, with all manner of fish, porpoises, tropical birds and sea birds. Day trips to the Yucatan are easy to arrange. My own recommendation: a strong dose of the island's natural attractions laced with a sampling of historical detours.

Cozumel should not be confused with Cancún, the relatively new and posh Yucatan resort just across the water, nor with Acapulco, the established and posh resort on Mexico's Pacific coast. With Cozumel, the adventure began on the Air Mexicana flight from Miami. The stewardess, in a standard announcement about flying time, food and safety, informed passengers that their life preservers were the cushions on which they were sitting. That was the first time in my memory that a plane making an international flight completely over water was not equipped with life preservers.

Cozumel is rustic, even primitive in some respects. There is a pervasive mañana spirit, which can be infectious when a visitor wants to relax but frustrating at other times. Hotel service can be haphazard. Making a tele-phone call, either on the island or abroad, is a gamble. Although in a half-century of wandering. I have ignored most cautions about drinking the local water, these cautions definitely should be observed on Cozumel. A modicum of Spanish, even from a phrase book, is needed, as little English is spoken, even in hotels catering to tourists. A Volkswagen we hired for a day of exploring was so battered that when the windshield wiper was turned on, the horn honked. En route to Cozumel, my wife and I met a pair of recent graduates of the University of Central Florida in Orlando, who were headed to the island for a week of snorkeling and scuba diving. The young men, both accom-plished divers, said that Cozumel was chal-

ter of the Caribbean. "If you don't try snorkeling," said Paul Ballentine, one of the young men, "you will never forgive your-self."

There was plenty of opportunity to do so. A handy booklet, the "Blue Guide to Cozumel," which promises to explain "everything you wanted to know about Cozumel but didn't have the Spanish to ask," lists no fewer than 13 dive shops. At these shops, beginners can rent snorkeling or diving gear, take classes and arrange trips to the best reefs, such as the Paradise Reef. Rates range from the peso equivalent of $5 a day for a mask, snorkel and swimming fins to $275 for a full course that culminates in a certificate from an international association of divers. Though I wasn't up to the full course, I did try snorkeling, swallowing half a lagoon be-fore I got the hang of it, then marveling at the fish, plain and striped, white and blue and black and multicolored, long and flat and round. An easy way to see Cozumel's underwater life was to float with the current that runs from south to north off the western shore over the sandy white sea bed, Snorkelers do that for a mile or more, then swim to shore and walk back to their starting point to begin again, much like skiers climbing to the top of the hill in the days before lifts. Even easier was riding in a glass-bottomed boat, with a guide who knew where the best schools of fish collected. Easiest of all was sitting on the hotel balcony and watching half a dozen porpoises undulate against the current through the clear water, feeding as they proceeded in stately dignity.

For the bird watcher, Cozumel is a treasure. The island, whose name is derived from a Mayan name meaning "the island of the swallows," is home to hundreds of those seemingly tireless birds that spend the day darting through the air catching insects. Great-tailed grackles perched on the palm trees, clucking and whistling. Every evening just before sunset, several magnificent frig-ate birds circled slowly over the water a mile away, riding the wind. Occasionally a pelican lumbered by. Out over the jungle a dozen hawks circled looking for prey.

OR a history buff, exploring on Cozumel and the Yucatan is most intrinsical. mel and the Yucatan is particularly intriguing. The Mayans, whose ancestors are believed to have come from Asia through Alaska and California and thence across Mexico to the Yucatán, reached Cozumel by about A.D. 300. There they built a shrine to Ixchel, god of fertility and healing, whose stone remains can still be found deer in the jungle. Spanish conquistadors landed on the island in 1518, bringing a new language and religion and smallpox, which roving the Spanish Main, but not until 1848. did permanent residents come back, in the form of Mexican refugees fleeing a civil war on the mainland. By the early 20th century. Cozumel had become a resort. A photograph of Charles Lindbergh, taken in the late 1920s, hangs in the El Portal restaurant in San Miguel.

Halfway across the nine-mile-wide (14kilometer) island, to the left of the only road traversing it, are the stone ruins of San Gervasio, most of which are still covered with brush. But one can wander among the main grouping of temples, altars and a crypt, with their fading frescos of ocher, blue and

It is a great mystery as to why the Mayas settled in this inhospitable place, which has no streams, uncertain rainfall and water available only by tapping the water table.

How they survived is a puzzle. One day we joined a tour that began with a 90-minute voyage on an ancient packet boat with wheezing diesel engines from San Miguel to Playa del Carmen on the Yucatan coast. The journey continued with a bus ride through more jungle, from which a few farmers had cleared enough land to eke out a harsh life, to the ruins at Tulum. These ruins alone were worth the trip. Here, the ancient Mayas built a city walled with gray stone whose centerpiece was a high temple that stands majestically atop a cliff, set against the green and blue sea. Here, the high priests of Tulum may have sacrificed human beings - usually the chiefs of vanquished tribes to the sun gods.

While we consider such customs barbaric today, the people of Tulum evidently had a strong sense of justice, for the penalty for murder in their culture was slavery for as many years as the victim might have been expected to have lived.

FAVORITE restaurant was Costa Brava, a small concrete-block establishment on the southern edge of San Miguel built around a tree that sticks through the roof. A 16-year-old boy patrolled the sidewalk outside, hawking the restaurant's merits with a line of patter worthy of Madison Avenue. The decor was simple, with fishing nets strung around the tree and colorful Mexican blankets on the walls. But the service was friendly and the vegetable soup, with great chunks of fresh vegetables piled in a slightly spicy broth, was the best I've ever had. Also tasty were the shrimps in butter and the grouper fillet in garlic sauce.

Dinner was often followed or preceded by an evening stroll through the town for shopping. Along with the usual trinkets, one could buy Mexican blouses, blankets and tablecloths, and, at Casa Blanca, elegant silver jewelry made by Mexican artisans. Since almost everyone observes the siesta between about 1 and 5 P.M., shops stay open During one of those strolls, we learned that the island is not as far off the beaten track as we had thought. My wife, who is Japanese, had doubted that her compatriots. well traveled though they may be, had made it to Cozumel. But as we passed an open stall filled with bracelets and clay models of Mayan gods, a young Cozumeleno said in the flawless accents of Osaka, a center of Japanese commerce, "I can get it for you whole-

A Question of Class On Flights in Europe

by Roger Collis

S the business traveler being ripped off on short-haul flights in Europe? "Yes, I wouldn't disagree with that," said Lance Coleman, general manager of Kuoni Travel Ltd. in London. This sentiment is being voiced more and more vehemently by a growing number of executives who feel that they are being short-changed by some airlines on their so-called business-class services. "I resent paying a surcharge just to sit in a cur-tained-off section of an economy cabin with a free drink," is a typical reaction. The International Air Travel Association (IATA) in Geneva recently heard complaints by several consumer bodies, notably the International Chamber of Commerce, at the confusion and lack of common standards in the business-class market. The Airline Users Committee, a London-based study group set up by the British Civil Aviation Authority, is examming what it suspects may be deliberate attempts by some airlines to force business travelers who want a flexible, full-fare economy ticket to "trade up" to business class. In many cases the service offered is inferior to that of the old economy class. Business class began to be introduced eight years ago with the concomitant demise of first class on many short-haul routes and the burgeoning of discount fares. (Today, only Iberia, Lufthansa and Swissair offer first class within Europe.) The idea was to reward the executive who paid the full economy fare with a separate cabin, away from sandaled back-packers and other hoi polloi, and a more distinctive service such as more cabin attendants, free champagne, priority check-in, executive lounge and so on.

Alan Deller, now marketing director of British Caledonian, said: "I used to be No. 2 in British Airways's sales organization. When club class was introduced in Europe the attitude was that what we'd actually done was to downgrade the back end of the plane, left the front as it was, put a curtain in the middle, take the economy fare away, and force the guy who wants an economy ticket to pay a surcharge. That was a mistake and one that we don't intend to make."

Interestingly, British Caledonian claims to have been the first airline to introduce business class, in 1977 on its London-Houston route. But it has not yet done so in Europe and is reluctant to discuss its

The amount of surcharge for business class can depend on the route traveled as well as the arrine. It's what the traffic will bear. According to one investigator for a consumer group, flights out of London are especially susceptible to this kind of thing. "London to Australia is a good example," he said. "You pay a premium unless you go over to Amsterdam and fly from there."

Swissair and SAS are at least two honorable exceptions to this practice. Both airlines allow full economy-fare passengers o fly business class without extra charge. The old economy class cabin in the back of the plane is reserved for people flying on discount fares, but they enjoy standards of service at least equal to that of the old economy class. IATA is sympathetic to consumer com-plaints about business class, but can do little except cajole its member airlines to adopt a common standard.

We can't get involved in their commercial affairs, although this class question, what we call product definition, is a serious difficulty with us," a spokesman said.
"Our hope has been that where there's no difference in the seating the business-class fare would be at the same price as full economy. But it basn't workel out like this. There are cases of a surcharge being paid for a product that really isn't worth a surcharge."

To be fair to the airlines, it's sot easy to offer a distinctive service on business class within Europe. You can hardly expect a gourmet meal on a 40-minute light, and who cares about one free drink

"At the end of the day, what the businessman is buying on the shor iaul is a flexible ticket and what I call ussic-free hustle," said British Caledonian's Deller. Philip Sim, business services coordinator at British Airways, said there is a time when service in the air can beess important than service on the groundlike priority check-in and the use of a executive dub lounge.

Lack of service noted despite clubby labes

But comfort also counts to the short-haul business flier, especially first class has virtually disappered. Somairlines do provide more legroom, called at pitch in industry jargon, than the standerd 32 inches (82 centimeters) in econory class. But they still squeeze passengers to the same cramped economy seat.

There are higher standars of comfort and service on intercontineal routes, but intense competition for the xecutive dollar has led to a bewilderig smorgasbord of options for the busing flier. Among the hot issues that are beg fought in the trans-Atlantic advertism wars are seat pitch and width, which an vary by as much as six inches on the ame plane from one airline to another.

First-class passenge can sometimes come off second-best British Airways, which claims to havehe "widest seat in the sky" at 24 inch in business class, offers a measly 21 inch in first class. The very term business can be confusing. Take your pick from acific, Super Executive, Marco Polo, upper, Gold, Galaxy and Preference Cis.

Some light has en cast into this consumer jungle by Hg Robinson, London-based specialists business travel, who have made a sury of the business and first-class service of 28 airlines operating out of Britain or oth short and long hand flights. Their 70age report compares air-port facilities, alane seating, such as the availability of expers and angles of recline, and the prortion allocated to nonsmokers as weas details of in-flight cater-

Business os buffs will be overjoyed to learn that of half the airlines offer free champagne/business class and that Singapore Airles, which scores high in ca-tering, profes only one executive toilet on its 747 compared with five on SAS.

Finding a First-Rate Steak in Scotland

By R.W. Apple Jr.

INLITHGOW, Scotland - "A dish that I do love to feed upon," remarks Kate to Petruchio's manservant, Grunio, in "The Taming of the Shrew," when he offers her a piece of beef and mustard.

The British adored steak in Elizabethan times - the nickname Beefeaters for the Yeomen of the Guard dates from that era and they continued to adore it in Victorian times. Nathaniel Hawthorne, reaching for a simile, wrote, "Dr. Johnson's morality was as English an article as a beefsteak." Not for nothing is the British equivalent of Uncle Sam called John Bull.

But like so many things gastronomic in Britain, the steak has fallen on hard times in the 20th century. It is still possible to find a good roast rib of beef in London or in the countryside, but good steaks are even scarcer than Johnsonian morality.

The typical English restaurant beefsteak is underweight, underage and overcooked, not a patch on its counterpart in New York or Florence or Tokyo, I have been told for at least a decade by Englishmen (and even by Frenchmen) that the best beef in Europe comes from Scotland, but I had never been able until recently to find the evidence to support their argument on my dinner plate.

OW I have. The man who made a believer of me is Clive David South African who was so disap-pointed with the beef offered him by wholesalers that he closed his Edinburgh restaurant and set out to learn butchering. Once he had mastered his new trade, he and his Dundee-born wife, Anne, opened a place called the Champany Inn near Linlithgow, about 30 minutes' drive west of Edinburgh. They serve an array of steaks: nb loin, Pope's eye, sirloin and filet (but only reluctantly, because he considers filet "expensive and inferior").

The steaks bear comparison with those of Christ Cella in Manhattan or Peter Luger in Brooklyn or Morton's in Chicago or Sostanza in Florence, which is to say that they are thick, seared black on the outside and dark red in the center, the juices sealed in, the flavor rich and smoky, the texture tender but still chewy. Best of all, they fill the nostrils, indeed the whole restaurant, with their hearty aroma.

Last year, Drew Smith, the new editor of the Good Food Guide, a campaigner for honest and unpretentious cooking, put Champany on the map. In the 1985 edition of the guide, just out, he says that these are "the best steaks in Britain." He is absolutely Davidson cooks his steaks on a massive charcoal grill that generates enough heat to carbonize a rhinoceros, cooks them rare but not quite blue, if his customers allow him to have his way, and serves them on big oval plates. A trolley holds 10 mustards, including a particularly good English one made with honey; Kate would surely smile if she were ever to find her way to Linli hgow.

Clive Davidson, a big jolly man who is just as serious and just as knowledgeable is about his sauces, says that there are six main factors that affect the way a steak

ERE they are, together with his comments and a description of the meth-ods used: 1. The breed of steer. "I don't like Aberdeen Angus purebred, so I try to use Scots blue-gray — the ugliest beast you ever saw. Never get near Charolais or a Charolais cross, because it's too fibrous, far too fibrous. Hereford has too much marbling. What you want is a piece of beef that glistens, with creamy-colored fat that flakes off when you scrape it with your nail. It must never be at all rubbery."

2. How the steer is fed. "If possible you want a steer that has had to work for his meals, so the meat is best when they have been battling to find the short grass in June and July. When the grass is too young and tender, they gorge themselves and swell up. Very bad."

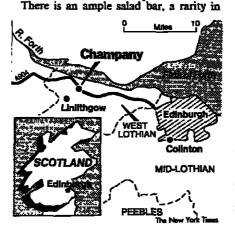

3. Aging. "We hang the meat for at least four weeks, and we have had some very good results in hanging it for eight. It goes into a chilled room — 39 degrees (4 degrees centigrade), 1 degree above the European Community limit — where ionizers help to retard the fungus growth and weight loss. Still, by the time we finish, we have lost about a quarter of the original weight — 10 percent from aging, 15 from trimming. An ordinary supermarket steak in Britain hasn't been aged at all."

4. The cut. "My absolute favorite is a Pope's eye, which is cut against the grain from the point where the hind leg connects with the body. It is never flabby and always full of flavor." (There is no direct American comparison, since both the pattern of butchering and the terminology is different. Da-vidson said he liked American Porterhouses and T-bones best.)

5. Thickness. "You can't cook a thin steak well. Ours are a minimum of one and a quarter inches, and they should be thicker. 6. Cooking. "I paint the steaks with olive oil, which has a low flash point; that means that the meat cannot burn before it cooks. I use a lava-rock grill, heated with gas, that must be lighted an hour before cooking. I turn the steak as few times as possible, seldom more than three, because that toughens it. And I never salt the meat before cooking,

Steak isn't everything at Champany. There are several first courses, including frogs' legs cooked over the same grill and served in a tiny copper pan with foamy butter (my wife's favorite) and fine gravlax with mustard sauce (mine). There are deepfried onion rings, real ones, and baked potatoes that have never seen a piece of foil.

Europe, and creditable chocolate mousse and pecan pie for those hardy few who can cope with desert after an orgy of protein. And there is a first class wine list offering the full line of Beaujolais from Georges Duboeuf, lots of 1971 and 1972 Burgundies and a selection of South African reds, well served by the amiable and aptly named wine waiter, Andrew Backus.

Not easily satisfied. Davidson has installed a pool, imported from La Rochelle in western France and the only one of its kind in Britain, to hold live lobsters, oysters and scallops, as well as langoustes, which the Scots call crayfish. The water contains the same salts and trace elements as the Atlantic Ocean. The cocktail lounge, which he dislikes because it tends to decant too many customers into the dining room in no condition to appreciate the cooking, is soon to be replaced by a raw bar.

under a six-sided peaked wood roof, served by young waitresses in gingham pinafores. Hunting prints, green velveteen chairs and mahogany tables without cloths give the place something of the air of a London club. But the food in London clubs doesn't taste like this, and London clubs aren't surrounded, as is Champany, by a garden populated

We are, with fair frequency, asked to of dishes that do not put too much strain on ? purse strings, and that is what we have

First, we would propose ground mead it best, pork or lamb — as lean as posde.
Then, there are foods that are some talled "stretchers" — macaroni, pooes and so on — that should be used in lited quantities although sometimes the may serve as the focal point of a platter. Hally, one should consider such underrat, and therefore low-cost, cuts of meat as last of lamb, one of our favorites. Our specific offerings include a at loaf given a special flavor with chopd fresh basil, a little Parmesan cheese, cheed garlic and pine nuts. These ingredies are, of course, the basis for the excelit Italian sance known as pesto, which is a we call it a pesto meat loaf. We also inch a curried base of ground beef topped wid judicious amount of well-seasoned mast potatoes.

This is our most recent version that traditional English dish, shepherdise, although our recipe is very much at wince with the original And, finally, we prat a breast of lamb stuffed Italian-style, 2 filling com-posed of ricotta cheese, spach, Parmesan cheese and mushrooms.

SHEPHERDPIE

6 potatoes, about 1½ pods
Salt to taste, if desire
1 tablespoon peauut, vetable or corn oil
½ cup finely chopped clas
1 tablespoon finely mini garlic 1 tablespoon finely mind garlic 1 or 2 tablespoons on powder l teaspoon ground can

I teaspoon ground conder 2 pounds ground leaved Freshly ground per to taste

1 cap crushed, can imported tomatoes

2 cap fresh or can chicken broth I teaspoon sugar 2 cups cooked fre or frozen green peas

WITH CURRITMEAT

y cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese 1 egg, lightly beaten Fresh tomato sance (see recipe). 1. Preheat oven to 400 degrees. 2. Put the pork in a mixing bowl. Add sait and pepper

> Add to the pork. 4. Add the bread crumbs, pine nuts, basil, parsiey, Parmesan cheese and egg. Blend

3. Heat the oil in a small skillet. Add the garlic and cook, stirring, until it is wilted.

5. Put the mixture into a standard six-cup loaf pan. Pack it down and smooth over the top. Place in the oven and bake about one hour or until the internal temperature registers 165 degrees. Remove from the oven and let the meat loaf stand about 15 minutes before slicing and serving with the tomato

Yield: Six to eight servings. STUFFED BREAST OF LAMB

2 breasts of lamb with pockets for stuffing Add the meat and cook, stirring down with the side of a heavy kitchen spoon to break up the lumps. Add salt, pepper, the Salt to taste, if desired Freshly ground pepper to taste 1 pound fresh spinach in bulk or 1 10-ounce package in plastic tomatoes, broth and sugar. Cook, stirring

l tablespoon butter 1 tablespoon finely chopped garlic 2 cups thinly sliced mushrooms, about 4

5. Drain the potatoes and put them through a food mill or a potato ricer back 1/2 cup ricotta cheese into the hot kettle. Sur in the peas and cook ¼ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese 1 egg, lightly beaten 6. Add the hot milk, two tablespoons of is teaspoon finely grated nutmeg the butter and pepper, preferably white, 1 tablespoon peanut, com or vegetable oil 1 teaspoon crimbled rosemary leaves 7. Heat an eight-cup baking dish (a soufflé dish works well) and spoon the piping-hot curried meat into it. Top with the hot % cup chicken broth.

 Preheat oven to 425 degrees.
 Sprinkle the breasts of lamb inside and out with salt and pepper.

3. Pick over the spinach and pull off and discard any tough stems or blemished leaves. Drop the spinach into boiling water to cover and cook one minute. Drain. When cool enough to handle, press the spinach to extract as much excess liquid as possible. Chop

4. Heat the butter in a saucepan and add the garlic, mushrooms, salt and pepper. Cook, stirring, until the mushrooms give up their liquid and it evaporates. Add the chopped spinach and stir to blend. Let cool slightly. Spoon the mixture into a mixing bowl. Add the ricotta. Parmesan, egg and nutmeg. Blend thoroughly.

5. Stuff each lamb pocket with equal amounts of the filling, packing it down to almost completely fill the pockets. Sew up the openings of each pocket with string. 6. Rub the meat all over with oil. Sprinkle both sides with rosemary and place the breasts bone side up on a baking dish. 7. Place in the oven and bake 20 minutes. Reduce the oven heat to 400 degrees. Turn the breasts bone side down, Bake 25 minutes. Pour off the fat. Pour the broth into the pan and stir to dissolve the brown particles that cling to the bottom and sides of the pan, Place in the oven and bake 15 minutes

Yield: Four to six servings. 2 1985 The New York Times

Researchers Try to Revive Computer Bubble Memory

By DAVID E. SANGER

New York Times Service EW YORK - Four years ago, the bubble burst for bubble memory. Once viewed as one of the most promising ways to store and retrieve computer information — a method that preserved it even when the plug was pulled and the display screen went dark — magnetic bubbles turned out to be too slow and too expensive to be competitive, company after company concluded.

In 1981, after investing millions of dollars, Texas Instruments Inc., National Semiconductor Corp. and Rockwell International

Corp. closed their bubble operations and turned back to the traditional means of storing information: chips and magnetic

Now, however, there are indications that magnetic bubbles may make a comeback. At Carnegie-Mellon University, where a new Magnetics Technology Center has already become a hothed of new research in data-storage techniques, researchers have for the first time put semiconductor devices on bubble-memory material. The development prom-to marry the durability of bubbles to the speed of chips. ises to make bubble memories much smaller and much faster, combining the durability of bubbles with the speed of semi-

Researchers hope

"It's a very promising step," said Lane Mason, a senior industry analyst for Dataquest, which follows the memory market. "With bubble prices so high, a big enough market just hasn't developed to give you that warm and fuzzy feeling that bubbles are here to stay." The worldwide market last year was about $140 million, or "about equal to about two weeks of 64K RAM production," Mr. Mason said. The 64K RAM, the most common of memory chips, is a random-access-memory chip which can store 65,536 bits of information.

Bubble memories differ greatly from semiconductors, however. They are best envisioned as tiny, permanent magnets on the surface of a chip made of garnet, the same material used in gemstones. The position of the bubbles, each of which represents a single bit of information, is changed by two sets of coils wound

"All these bubbles are marching around like a band on a football field, and each one has to march out to be read," said Mark Kryder, a former researcher at International Business Machines Corp.'s T.J. Watson Research Laboratory who worked with David Greve and Paul Rasky on the Carnegie-Mellon effort. The data from each member of the band are then translated through a handful of "support" chips surrounding each bubble device, and sent to the computer's processor.

HE benefits are tremendous. In a desktop computer, data might be stored — at least temporarily — in RAM chips, but in the industry such chips are known as "volatile." That means that when the power disappears, so do the data, instantly and irrevocably. More often, data are written onto a magnetic disk, where things are more permanent. But disk drives are heavy and cannot take much bouncing around.

Because they are solid-state devices, bubble memories can take all sorts of abuse. And because the data are stored magnetically, a constant stream of power is not necessary. Thus, they are particularly attractive in portable computers, and companies like the Teleram Corp. have used them in their models for some years. However, for reasons of economy, other portables, like Tandy's popular Model 100 portable, use RAM's supplied with power by battery packs.

"Bubbles work for years and years, which make them particularly attractive to the military, and anyone who needs memory in a miserable environment," Mr. Kryder said. As a result, bubble memories have been incorporated in robotics equipment on the (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

IBM Net Rose 20% In 1984

Apple Higher; Tandy Off 24%

NEW YORK — International Business Machines Corp. said Thursday that its fourth-quarter profit climbed 16.6 percent from a year earlier, while full-year 1984 arnings jumped 20 percent.

Other computer makers posted mixed results. Tandy Corp. said its fiscal second-quarter profit slumped 24 percent, and Hon-eywell Inc. said fourth-quarter profit tumbled 65 percent because of a charge related to the previously announced plans to sell its Synertek semiconductor unit

Apple Computer, meanwhile, said its fiscal first-quarter profit soared nearly eightfold from a year earlier. But its president warned of an "extremely challenging" quarter ahead because of rising dealer in-ventories of personal computers. That troubled Wall Street, and

Berlin-Based Schering's Big Role Abroad Helped Profit Jump in '84

BERLIN - Schering AG is a loner in this divided city, the last of West Germany's major comof West Germany's major com-panies to maintain headquarters

Although the diversified phar-maceutical and chemical group might appear cut off from the main currents of world trade, Schering is more closely tied to international markets than any major West German company. Eighty-two percent of the group's 1984 revenue of just under 5 billion Deutsche marks (about $1.57 billion) came from foreign sales.

That international connection paid off big last year with surging profits. And this year, stockholders are expected to receive a dividend boost. Klaus Pohle, one of the company's six directors, pointed to the helpful effects of the strong dollar on his company's foreign operations. He especially singled out operations in the United States, where 1984 revenue topped 1 billion DM and where the market surpassed that of West Germany as the largest for Schering products for the first

Mr. Pohle said 1984 group results would show record net profits exceeding by "at least 50 percent" 1983's 80.1 million DM.

"If anyone is going to profit from an export boom, then Schering is going to be on the top of that list as far as German companies are concerned," said Mr. Pohle, who oversees company finances from his office on the loth floor of the modern Schering Building, which overlooks the Berlin Wall 200 meters (660 feet) away.

Mr. Pohle joined Schering's board in 1981 after being finance director at the West German chemical giant, BASF AG, a Schering competitor.

Final profit figures, Mr. Pohle said, would depend on exchangerate conversions as well as special value-added tax rebates and special depreciation allowances for companies incorporated in at home in Berlin because of the company's unique access to the city's two major universities and its 180 research institutes. Berlin's first gene-technology research center, a 80-million-DM joint-venture between Schering and the city government, will open this year. Schering's own research-anddevelopment outlays last year rose 15 percent to 500 million DM from 433 million DM and will grow by at least another 30 million DM in 1985, Mr. Pohle

"The key question for Scher-ing is how fast it can translate its commendable research efforts into marketable_products," said an analyst at Deutsche Bank. They know the international pharmaceutical market doesn't wait long for stragglers."

About 400 million DM of last year's research funds went to biomedical research, including developing new drugs for cardiovascular and central-nervoussystem problems as well as for final testing of the fourth generation of oral contraceptives devel-oped by Schering, called Gesto-

Mr. Pohle said much of 1984's profits would be put back into retained earnings to finance expanding operations in the United States, a Schering priority since the late 1970s.

In 1979, the company acquired the internal-medicine dirision of Cooper Laboratories. This division was renamed Berlex Laboratories Inc. Ashland Oil Co.'s chemical-products division, now known as Sherex Chemical Co., was also acquired that year.

Part of the expansion will include launching Gestoden on the U.S. market, where Schering expects to get approval from the Food and Drug Administration without much delay.

This would mark the first time that Schering would market the pill in the United States after a long history of troubled relations with the United States.

"Our recent focus on the U.S., where our sales have grown from 30 million (DM) in 1974 to over one billion (DM) today, is a clear change of direction at Schering." Mr. Pohle said. "Our operations in America were expropriated (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Finance Chiefs Put Off Action On Currencies

WASHINGTON - Top finance officials of five leading industrial countries said Thursday that they would be willing to undertake coordinated intervention in foreigncurrency markets when necessary, but stopped short of saying they would do so now.

The statement came as finance ministers and central bank chiefs of the United States, Britain, West Germany, France and Japan wound up a two-day meeting here.
Although the meeting had been scheduled before the dollar began its most recent climb against other major currencies, there had been speculation before the meeting began Wednesday that the group might take joint action to weaken the dollar.

"We are willing to undertake co-ordinated intervention in instances where coordinated intervention would be helpful," said Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, speaking for the group, known as the "Group of Five."

The agreement reaffirmed a commitment that these nations made at the summit of major industrial nations in Williamsburg, Virginia, in May 1983. They agreed at that time to resort to coordinated intervention when

Dollar Finishes Lower in N.Y. in Skittish Trading

The Associated Press NEW YORK — The dollar turned lower against most currencies in skittish late trading Thursday amid speculation that finance ministers meeting in Washington might act to halt its record-shattering climb.

New York.
In New York, the pound finished at $1.1235, up from $1.1187. In London, the pound fell to $1.1185, compared with $1.1205. The dollar finished at 254.10 Japanese yen, down from 254.925 yen in Tokyo. It finished at 254.15 yen in New York, down from 254.85.

Other late dollar rates in Europe compared with late Wednesday included 3.1816 Deutsche marks, down from 3.1833; 2.6738 Swiss francs, down from 2.6758, and 9.75

French francs, up from 9.746. In New York, the dollar finished at 3.174 DM, down from 3.187; at 2.672 Swiss francs, down from 2.68, and at 9.72 French francs, down er airlines were expected to follow. American's restrictions — including a 30-day advance purchase and a provision that 25 percent of the ticket price is non-refundable - will protect the airline's balance sheet, according to Lowell Duncan.

American posted record earnings for 1984 despite a fourth-quarter slump and reportedly has a $1billion fund of cash and short-term investments available. It said it did not believe that it was touching off a fare war — something for which the airline has criticized competitors in the past Following disclosure of the fare Charles Hanneman, an airline from the front of the wing.

industry analyst at Thomson McKinnon Securities in New York, said he did not expect the fare cuts to have a major impact. He noted that People Express already charges $119 for transcontinental flights and asked, "Where's the damage?" Some other airlines offer discount one-way, cross-country fares as low as $99.

Mr. Hanneman said the restrictions on the American fares "are if anything tighter than anything now in effect" and that the penalty provision is new for the industry.

American's new fares take effect Feb. 18 and are good for any of the 92 cities the airline serves within the United States, excluding Hawaii and Alaska.

A free-trade area is an agreement between two or more countries to abolish tariffs and other mutual trade barriers between the signatories. Such an agreement is allowed under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade as long as it eliminates practically all barriers between the signatories, the official, Robert Johnstone, said.

"There's serious discussion going on and the government wants to engage the people of Canada in a wide-ranging discussion on this." Mr. Johnstone said.

He said the Canadian government will release a study on putting into effect a free-trade-area agreement which will then become the basis of a discussion on the issue.

Oxford on America.

(A Confidential Document.)

America is changing; that is agreed. Why, and from what, and to what, are not agreed.

Yet these questions touch us all.

For two years, 15 senior scholars from Oxford University studied these questions in depth. Their findings are now presented in America in Perspective.

America in Perspective is a detached, comprehensive look at the state of America today and the potential of America tomorrow. It grinds no axes and pulls no punches. It is based on fact, not opinion. Its purpose is understanding, not advocacy.

In 269 pages, America in Perspective casts a penetrating light on American politics, economics, markets and society. And a controversial light on the future of the American dream.

Above all, America in Perspective provides an objective account of America now and where it will be in ten years time. It may be the most comprehensive study of America in existence today.

Commissioned privately as a major $200,000 Oxford Analytica study, America in Perspective had such a profound effect on its sponsors that they now urge that it be given a wider audience.

Accordingly, a limited number are being released for public sale. You can obtain a copy by means of the coupon below.

6.3% Profit Rise Expected for '84 By Matsushita

OSAKA, Japan — Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. said Thursday that profits in the fiscal year that ended Nov. 20 would rise to about 250 billion yen ($981 million), up 6.3 percent from a year earlier.

Sales in the fiscal year are expected to rise 5.8 percent, to 3,450 billion yen from a year earlier, it said. The company said it plans to pay a 10-yen dividend for the year.

The expected poor growth rate for the year is attributable to the uncertainty of worldwide economic conditions, it said.

Video-equipment sales rose 21.9 percent to 1,026 billion yen from 842.38 billion a year earlier, it said. Communication and industrial equipment sales rose 29.4 percent to 613.55 billion yen from 474.08 billion a year earlier.

Electronic components sales rose 31.6 percent to 471.76 bil-lion yen from 358.45 billion a

PARIS — Air France, the stateowned airline, boosted profits sixfold last year despite rising fuel costs, the airline's president, Marceau Long, said Thursday.

The airline posted a net profit of 530 million francs ($54.4 million) last year, compared with 87.2 million francs in 1983, he said. Revenue in 1984 rose 13 percent to 27.6 billion francs. The increase came despite a 15-percent rise in the dollar against the franc during the year, which sharply pushed up the cost of aviation fuel, he said. NEMESIS: Truman and Johnson in the Coils of War in Asia

By Robert J. Donovan. 216 pp. $14.95. St. Martin's Press, 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10010.

Reviewed by Archimedes L. A. Patti

A T a time when there is a tendency to revert to simplistic thinking about non-nuclear wars, unconcernedly dismissing all mention of Vietnam or even South Korea, where about 40,000 Americans are still stationed, this book is a timely reminder of the illusions and futility that brought the United States into those two catastrophic conflicts.

From the vantage point of a White House reporter, National Book Award winner Robert Donovan captures the complexities of decision-making with their concomitant implications, intrigues, undercurrents and pressures. He incisively examines the origins and conduct of both wars and finds striking parallels in their anatomy, concluding that they were "cut from the same cloth of the policy of containment of communism in Asia.

"Nemesis" is an excellent study in tandem of both wars and of the devastating effect they had on the lives of Presidents Harry S. Truman and Lyndon B. Johnson. It skillfully and unambiguously compares the causes and effects. the pressures and commitments, the traps and pitfalls that led to tragic and inconclusive re-

Donovan introduces Truman and Johnson as "two gamecocks who had come to the White House originally upon the death of two famous presidents" and who later "had been elected in their own right to show what they could do." Their elections, 16 years apart, were hailed as harbingers of progress in civil rights and reded-ication to the policy of using federal money to improve the lives of the American people. But the Truman Fair Deal and the Johnson Great Society became mired in conflicting interests that had roots in their predecessors' legacy the containment of Communism.

This legacy, Donovan suggests, governed the role and conduct of both presidents, casting a pall over their administrations, shattering their dreams for a better society, and compelling them to leave Washington with a deep sense of unfulfillment. Neither president was able to end the war in which he had committed American troops to combat.

Donovan credits President Truman with having "established the framework in which all the postwar presidents, including Johnson, shaped their own [foreign] policies," and so it was. President Roosevelt had advocated a system of postwar trusteeships for dependencies such as Korea and Indochina (Vietnam). Trustical systems as the state of the context and his immen man subscribed to that concept and his immediate concern was control of Korea, bringing the United States into competition with the Soviet Union. In China the Nationalists were losing ground to Mao Zedong, and in Vietnam the French were faring no better against Ho Chi Minh. In Southeast Asia leftist elements clamored for independence. In the Middle East and in Europe communist parties maneuvered for political control. The anti-communist hysteria was on and in 1948 the Soviet Union became the enemy.

"Nemesis" is rich with anecdotes about the two presidents and the men around them. "Have to talk to God's right hand man," Truman wrote to his cousin on the way to meet with MacArthur on Wake Island. When the president's plane arrived, the general was sit-ting in a jeep surrounded by a small crowd, seemingly trying to upstage Truman, and did not go out to the ramp. The president "refused to budge from his seat until MacArthur finally to budge from his seat until MacArthur finally came to the ramp. Only then did he descend."

Johnson's last years in office were difficult ones. Reverses in Vietnam, public dissent, a party split, and Bobby Kennedy's making a run for the presidency disheartened Johnson. "Sometimes in those months Johnson, who was not a regular communicant in any church, became so consumed with anxiety that late at night he would order his limousine and a Secret night he would order his limousine and a Secret Service detail and drive to St. Dominic's Catholic Church for private prayers with a few priests and Christian brothers. Beginning in 1966, he returned for consolation from time to time, including a night when he had ordered the bombing near Hanoi and Haiphong."

Donovan's account raises many questions.

Particularly troubling is the abysmal lack of, or appreciation for, intelligence at the policy and decision-making level prior to committing the United States. Days before the North Koreans invaded South Korea none of Truman's advisers had told him of massive preparations north of the 38th parallel for a drive south. General Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, later said, "I don't think you can say that any of us knew when we went into this thing, what would be involved." And Donovan points up that during the MacArthur offensive in Korea, "The crowning mischief was that no American official had the slightest valid idea how many Chinese might be in Korea." Further on, he notes "The lack of intelligence itself became an incentive for advancing

The same conditions prevailed in the Vietnam conflict. "Neither Johnson nor Eisenhower nor Truman nor Acheson nor Dulles," says Donovan, "had ever really understood Viet-nam, its people, its culture, its history, its institutions, its politics, its aspirations."
"Nemesis" makes good reading. It is terse, factual, well-documented, devoid of over-burdensome details and thorough in essentials.

Erotic Lennon Drawings On Exhibit in Liverpool

The Associated Press IVERPOOL - A collection of the late John

Lennon's erotic drawings went on display in Britain Wednesday for the first time since police seized them at a London gallery in 1970. The 14 drawings were produced by ex-Beatle Lennon while on honeymoon with Yoko Ono nemon while on honeymoon with Yoko Ono in 1969. They show the couple in various acts of love and caused a storm of controversy among church leaders and politicians in 1970. "Times have changed and we are delighted to have the display here," said Roger White, general manager of Beatle City, the museum where the drawings are on display until Easter.

In Defense of the Receivers: Shula Gives a Warning

By Gary Pomerantz

Washington Post Service
SAN FRANCISCO — Because Miami's mighty mite receivers, Mark Duper and Mark Clayton, have been the victims of numerous vicious hits in recent games, Coach Don Shula of the Dolphins has sent out a pre-Super Bowl warning.

"As long as it is within the rules, it's part of the game," Shula said of any hard hits San Francisco's de-fensive players might have planned for Duper and Clayton in Super Bowl XIX Sunday. "But if it is deliberate and not within the rules of the game, something should be done. The guy should be thrown out of the game."

Simply put, Shula fears that the Marks Brothers have become Marked Men. Such is the price they must pay for being 5-foot-8 darters who helped Miami become the first team in league history to possess two 1,300-yard receivers in the

"But as you can see by the statistics and the records," Moore said, no one has succeeded. One thing has been found out - both of these guys can't be intimidated. Both can play with pain. I don't see them knocking Duper or Clayton out of the ball game Sunday."

The 49ers' defense fancies itself for its hard-hitting fury. Three years ago, the 49ers won the Super Bowl and the secondary became known as "Dwight Hicks and the Cornerbacks Ronnie Lott and Then, in the Dolphins' 45-28 vic-tory over Pittsburgh in the confer-ence title game 10 days ago. Duper was knocked woozy again and missed several series after a thwacking from cornerback Sam Washington. Clayton missed the entire second half after jamming his shoulder on the ground, diving for an incomplete pass.

Duper caught 71 passes for 1,306 yards and eight touchdowns this season. Clayton caught 73 passes for 1,389 yards and a league-record 18 touchdowns. Together, they are match and fuse.

Julius Erving: Still hitting heights in his 14th season.

No Retirement Plans Yet For the 76ers' Good Doctor

PHILADELPHIA - There have been a few people around the National Basketball Association who have been hinting that the good Doctor, Julius Erving, should be thinking about retirement. Erving and the Philadelphia 76ers don't concur. Erving, a little more than a month away from his 35th birthday, signed a contract Wednesday to play another season.

By way of celebration, Dr. J went out a few hours later at the Spectrum and led the Sixers to their 13th consecutive victory, an easy 122-99 decision over the Atlanta Hawks. Erving scored 21 points in the first half to lead the 76ers to a 63-47 lead, then turned the game over to the younger players, including Moses Malone. Malone finished with 34 points, although he sat out almost all of the last quarter.

Erving, who began his career in 1971 with Virginia of the old American Basketball Association, will soon pass the 27,000point mark in an illustrious ca-

Erving has scored 15,243 points in the NBA and 11.662 in the ABA, a total of 26,905, and is challenging the Denver Nuggets' Dan Issel for fourth place on the combined NBA-

ABA scoring list.
"I'm really not thinking about next season," Erving said. "Right now, all I'm thinking about is doing everything I can to help us win another championship. I feel we are improving all the time."

The Sixers' general manager, Pat Williams, in announcing the signing, said Erving's new contract would take effect when his old one expires after the season. Financial terms were not disclosed, but it is believed the contract calls for a hefty raise. Erving currently makes more than $1 million a season.

Erving, who will be 35 next month, said earlier this month he would return for the 1985-86 season. Erving has shown no signs of slowing down this season, averaging 20.7 points a

"This is a great day for the 76ers." Williams said. "Julius continues to play at a All-Star level this year and it appears he will continue operating at that plateau for next year also."

Erving is in the middle of his 14th pro season, his ninth with the NBA.

Unclean-Cuts of Yore

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — A news story about the Presidential Inaugural Committee's search for nonunion actors takes the back in sweet memory to a time long ago when my ambition was to be clean-cut. 'Attractive, clean-cut, all-American" — these were the qualities the committee said it wanted in nonunion actors, and though the union angle was what made the story newsworthy (President Reagan was once head of the movie actors' union), it was the term "clean-cut that made the story for me.

In my youth, cleanliness of cut was commonly associated, just as the inaugural committee apparently still associates it, with attractiveness and all-Americanhood. The three terms were so linked in the national consciousness that in speech they were often run together as one word, pronounced "attractivecleancutallamerican.

The values embodied in this term were complicated and vague at best, but to a literal-minded adolescent they spoke of unattainable standards of excellence. The "all-American" requirement was the most discouraging, for I associated it with football and especially with Yale football

There was little likelihood that I would get to Yale. Even if I should, the notion that anybody who was 6-foot-2 and weighed 119 pounds might play football for Yale well enough to become all-American seemed most unlikely. If all-Americanhood was absolutely impossible, measuring up to the second adjective — "attractive" - seemed merely out of the question. Adolescents were more realistic then than now. I knew that the possessor of a figure conforming to the above-cited statistics, a fellow nicknamed Ichabod the Crane, would have problems passing the "attractive" test.

Even if I sent away for the Charles Atlas muscle-building program, worked out with York bar-bells and got my weight up to 130 pounds, I would face difficult hair and teeth problems.

THE THE PARTY OF T

An irresistible Depression bargain in baby-teeth dentistry had led to curious gaps, rotations and tilts in my second-growth teeth. Hair that rustic relatives compared to their haystacks combined with an odd smile to make many people who saw the combination scowl.

What they were scowling at, I always thought, was the sudden realization that another human being could be both utterly unattractive and American.

Which left the "clean-cut" test. Anybody who could meet one out of three of the requirements of excellence wouldn't have to be ashamed, would he? Clean-cut seemed to be a goal I could reach.

I have since learned how complicated and nasty clean-cut can be, but at the time my grasp of the concept was rudimentary. To me the idea of "clean-cut" was pretty much what it sounded like.

Cleanliness and cutting were deeply involved. The cutting was of two varieties: haircutting and the cut of the jib, as a popular cliche had it. "I liked the cut of his jib," was a line found in many books dealing in heroes with strong jaw-

Of course, the hair had to be cut cleanly, too. No rat-tails around the ears, no fur trailing off the edge of the skull's overhang.

Pursuing clean-cuttedness, I spent much time thrusting my jaw forward to emphasize its jiblike cut, and tried to keep my haystack cropped close to the bone.

Soapy cleanliness was also vital, however, and here I was doomed to fail the third test. Cut I might be, but clean-cut? Never. It was my adolescent destiny to be perpetually dirty-cut, marked with ink smears on fingers and chin, newsprint smudges from elbows to wrists, and blackheads and acne pimples — always attributed to evilly "oily skin" — that were invulnerable to the most ravaging applications of hot water and soap.

The result: an adolescence spent adapting to failure, followed - as prolonged failure often is - by seething contempt for the standards that had defeated me. These fires have been long banked, but I still feel the lip's urge to curl for a sneer when I hear of some pitiably inadequate devil whose only recommendation is that he is attractive, clean-cut and all-American. Thus is the soul of the man warped by a misspent youth.

Yes, It Was a Starry Night for Van Gogh

By Lee Dye

Las Angeles Times Service
TOUCSON, Arizona — The swirling, bril-I liant sky in Vincent van Gogh's painting "Starry Night," reflected the deep thoughts of a serious amateur astronomer rather than the hallucinations of a mad genius, an art historian has told the American Astronomical Society meeting here.

Albert Boime said that van Gogh was obsessed with "celestial phenomena" when he created one of his best-known paintings while confined to an upper-story cell of the mental asylum in the French monastery, Saint-Paulde-Mausole.

Boime, a professor of art history at the University of California, Los Angeles, said that van Gogh was suffering with epilepsy, not insanity, and he believes that the painting was based on the artist's observations.

Boime, who presented a paper before the astronomical society's annual convention here Tuesday, said that several astronomers at UCLA and elsewhere had looked at his evidence and reached the same conclusion. Charles Whitney, an astrophysicist with the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics, was pursuing the same course and reached similar conclusions. In a telephone interview, Whitney said that both his findings and Boime's are of interest to art historians because they show that van Gogh based his paintings on "his actual impressions of the sky."

"We have to get away from this idea that van Gogh was insane." Boime said in an interview. "He suffered from epilepsy and he recognized that he needed help. He had put himself in the asylum. But he was perfectly rational and sane between seizures, as his Whitney, who has presented his findings to various arts symposiums, said that the thinking today is that van Gogh's "illness was episodic. Between the episodes, he knew what was going on."

Charles Moffett, curator of European paintings at the San Francisco Fine Arts Museum and a leading authority on van Gogh, said: "I have often taken the stand that he wasn't the lunatic everybody assumed him to be. He's had a bum rap. All you have to do is look at his works. They are from a cogent, intelligent, rational individual. Everything is very carefully worked out."

Boime said that van Gogh painted with great concern for accuracy, and with a passion for the heavens. "Van Gogh had more than a perfunctory interest in celestial phenomena, Boime said.

Boime said that he concluded that the French Impressionist had his astronomical facts after Ed Krupp of the Griffith Observatory used the Los Angeles planetarium to recreate the sky over the monastery as it would have appeared on June 19, 1889, the day Vincent wrote excitedly to Theo, his brother,

Astronomers verified the starry sky of Vincent van Gogh's "Starry Night."

that at last he had executed his 'Starry Night'

Boime showed a slide from the planetarium alongside a reproduction of the painting The moon in the painting is where it should have been if van Gogh painted the scene at around 4 A.M., as Boime believes, and the bright object just above the church steeple is where Venus would have been.

The constellation Aries is shown across the top of the painting, and Boime believes the swirling mass in the center of the work was a comet drawn from the artist's imagination rather than the scene as it appeared that morning. Boime presented a reproduction of a page showing various comets published in a 1881 issue of Harper's Weekly, "a magazine regularly read by van Gogh during that peri-od." The comets bear a striking similarity to the swirl in "Starry Night,"

But Whitney says that the swirling pattern, which first interested him in studying van Gogh's works, resembles a spiral galaxy, the first of which was discovered 40 years before van Gogh painted "Starry Night." Whitney said that he set out to determine whether van Gogh knew of the phenomena. He said he never found the evidence he was seeking, but he is inclined to believe that the artist was, in fact, depicting a spiral galaxy.

Boime conceded that the artist took considerable liberty with dimensions, and even inserted a church that would not have been in the area as viewed from van Gogh's cell. But he said that the scene as a whole "tallies with astronomical facts at the time the painting was executed."

In his letters, van Gogh frequently described the view from his window, and often included references to celestial phenomena, including this quote:

This morning I saw the country from my window a long time before sunrise, with nothing but the morning star [Venus], which looked very big." In other letters he described the stars in great detail, concluding at one point in a note to his sister that "it will be clear that putting little white dots on a blueblack surface is not enough."

"Naturally, the circumstances of the picture's execution were fraught with the deepest personal meaning for the painter." Boime said. "Incarcerated in both mind and spirit, urged on by the longing for both the security of life after death and the desire to escape his physical limitations, van Gogh painted a motif that put him in touch with the cosmos in a way that made this connection immediate and real." The stars, Boime concluded, represented immortality to the artist. As the artist wrote: Looking at the stars always makes me dream, as simply as I dream over the black dots representing towns and villages on a map. Why, I ask myself, shouldn't the shining dots of the sky be as accessible as the black dots on the map of France? Just as we take the train to get to Tarascon or Rouen, we take death to reach a star."

rights for the long-running "Dallas" soap opera from the British Broadcasting Corp. "A piece of hooliganism, a very underhand and shabby deal." said Michael Grade, controller of the BBC's Channel I. confronting Muir Sutherland, who engineered the deal for Thames Television, on a news program Wednesday. Grade threatened to screen the 17 episodes he still has on hand at the same time as Thames, "Thames could look very stupid playing the end of a cliffhanger before we've shown the be-ginning of it." Grade angrily told Sutherland, But Sutherland said, "We can do all sorts of things to bring the story up to date and will do so if we have to." The BBC charged that Thames secretly clinched a deal with the series' distributors, Worldvision Enterprise, in Hollywood, while the BBC was preparing to negotiate for the same package.

Kicked off their stage at Radio City Music Hall by Walt Disney movies, the Rockettes rejected an offer to perform at Disney's Epcot Center in Florida in return for ending their Radio City picketing. In place of the Rockettes, Disney plans to rent the 6,000-seat hall from late May through August for the premiere of two movies, "Return to Oz" and "Cauldron." The Disney offer, made Wednesday, was meant to resolve the dispute that sent the dancers to the streets last week, picketing and gathering petitions that urged they appear at the Music Hall with the Disney players this summer. "We're not turning down work," Rockette Eileen Collins said Wednesday. "The statement we're making is what a vital part of New York the Rockettes are." The dancers, a fixture at the Music Hall for more than 50 years, have said a Rockette-less Disney show could set a precedent for the theater's dispensing with them completely when their current contract expires in May 1986.

> Singer Brenda Arnau, who recently won a long battle against cancer, made her comeback in London in the 5,500-seat Albert Hall which was virtually empty - but she said she had no regrets. "I promised you an extravagant evening — what's more extravagant. than having the Albert Hall to yourselves?" she joked with the 100 people who showed up for the Tuesday night concert. Her has band, drummer Robert Tait, took out a second mortgage on his apart-ment to pay £3,500 (about $3,920) for renting the hall as a wedding present. Arnau, who has undergone two major operations for cancer. added: "It's the first time I have sung without pain." Lynda Murdin, a reporter for The Standard news paper who attended the concert wrote Wednesday that at first the small audience looked embarrassed and a handful walked out. But by the time Arnau belted out her final number, "Live and Let Die," which she had performed in the James Bond film, Murdin said the hall was "reveberating to cheers and calls for more."
